

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARIES

3 1761 00004245 7

725

THE LOEB CLASSICAL LIBRARY

EDITED BY

E. CAPPS, PH.D., LL.D. T. E. PAGE, LITT.D.

W. H. D. ROUSE, LITT.D.

LIVY

IV

BOOKS VIII—X

77697
527

LIVY

Oppos.

WITH AN ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY

B. O. FOSTER, PH.D.

OF STANFORD UNIVERSITY

IN THIRTEEN VOLUMES

IV

BOOKS VIII-X

34645
1729
9

LONDON : WILLIAM HEINEMANN
NEW YORK : G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS

MCMXXVI

Printed in Great Britain

TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE

THE Latin text of Vol. IV. (comprising Books VIII.-X.) has been set up from the fifth edition¹ of the Weissenborn-Müller text with German notes, except that the Periochae have been reprinted from the text of Rossbach (1910). But the spelling is that adopted by Professors Conway and Walters in their critical edition of Books VI.-X. (Oxford, 1919), which is also the source of most of the rather numerous readings which differ from those of the Weissenborn-Müller text, and has furnished besides the materials from which the textual notes have been drawn up. I have aimed to record every instance where the reading printed does not rest on the authority of one or more of the good MSS., and to indicate the source of the emendation.

In addition to the symbols used by the Oxford editors, I have employed Ω to designate such of the good MSS. as are not cited specifically for some other reading, and σ to designate one or more of the late MSS. or early printed texts.

¹ The sixth edition of Books VI.-VIII. did not reach me until my own text was in type.

TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE

Besides the translations mentioned in the preface to Vol. I. (those of Philemon Holland, George Baker, and Canon Roberts), I have had by me the anonymous version printed in London in 1686, in folio, "for Aunsham Churchill at the Black Swan in Ave-Mary Lane, near Paternoster Row."

I am also indebted to the editions of Book IX. by W. B. Anderson, Cambridge, 1909, and by T. Nicklin, Oxford, 1910. The commentaries of Weissenborn-Müller and Luterbacher have, of course, been constantly consulted, and the latter has been especially serviceable in helping to identify the various members of the same family in the preparation of the index.

The text and translation of the Periochae of the lost second decade have been included in this volume.

The map illustrating the campaign of the Caudine Forks has been adapted from Kromayer and Veith, Schlachten-Atlas zur antiken Kriegsgeschichte, published by Wagner and Debes, Leipzig.

B. O. F.

CONTENTS

	PAGE
TRANSLATOR'S PREFACE	v
THE MANUSCRIPTS	ix
BOOK VIII	1
SUMMARY OF BOOK VIII	158
BOOK IX	161
SUMMARY OF BOOK IX	354
BOOK X	359
SUMMARIES OF BOOKS X—XX	544
INDEX OF NAMES	563
MAPS—
THE CAUDINE FORKS	At end
ITALY AT THE TIME OF THE SAMNITE WARS ,	,,

THE MANUSCRIPTS

V = Veronensis, 4th century.

F = Floriacensis, 9th century.

P = Parisiensis, 10th century.

H = Harleianus prior, 10th century.

T = Thuaneus, 10th century.

t = the first and second leaves of T, by another scribe.

B = Bambergensis, 10th or 11th century.

M = Mediceus, 10th or 11th century.

Vorm. = Vormatiensis (as reported by Rhenanus).

R = Romanus, 11th century.

U = Upsaliensis, 11th century.

u = later part of U, 14th century.

D = Dominicanus, 11th or 12th century.

L = Leidensis, 12th century.

A = Aginnensis, 13th century.

a = later part of A, 14th century.

Frag. Haverk. = Fragmentum Haverkampianum (cf. Conway and Walters, vol. i., Praef. p. ix¹).

M¹, M², etc., denote corrections made by the original scribe or a later corrector. When it is impossible to identify the corrector, M², etc., are employed.

Ω = such of the above MSS. as contain the passage in question and are not otherwise reported.

ε = one or more of the late MSS. or early printed texts.

C.I.L. = Corpus Inscriptionum Latinarum.

LIVY

FROM THE FOUNDING OF THE CITY

BOOK VIII

A.U.C.
413

T. LIVI
AB URBE CONDITA

LIBER VIII

I. IAM consules erant C. Plautius iterum ¹L.
Aemilius Mamercus, cum Setini Norbanique Romam
nuntii defectionis Privernatium cum querimoniis
2 acceptae cladis venerunt. Volsorum item exercitum duce Antati populo consedisse ad Satricum allatum 3 est. Utrumque bellum Plautio sorte evenit. Prius ad Privernum profectus extemplo acie confixit.
Haud magno certamine devicti hostes; oppidum
captum redditumque Privernatibus praesidio valido
4 imposito; agri partes duae ademptae. Inde victor exercitus Satricum contra Antiates ductus. Ibi magna utrimque caede atrox proelium fuit; et cum tempestas eos neutro inclinata spe dimicantes dire-misset, Romani nihil eo certamine tam ambiguo fessi
5 in posterum diem proelium parant. Volscis recen-sentibus quos viros in acie amisissent haudquaquam
idem animus ad iterandum periculum fuit; nocte

¹ L. (lucius) D^r: licius D?L: titus (or t.) Ω.

LIVY
FROM THE FOUNDING OF THE CITY
BOOK VIII

I. THE consuls were now Gaius Plautius (for the B.C. 341 second time) and Lucius Aemilius Mamercus, when the men of Setium and Norba brought tidings to Rome that the Prvernates were in revolt, with complaints of a defeat suffered at their hands. It was also reported that a Volscian army, conducted by the Antiates, had encamped at Satricum. Both wars were by lot assigned to Plautius. He marched first on Prvernun and at once gave battle. Without much ado he overcame the enemy, captured Prvernun, and putting in it a strong garrison, restored it to the inhabitants, but deprived them of two-thirds of their territory. Thence he led his victorious army towards Satricum, to oppose the Antiates. The battle there, which was desperately fought, with heavy losses on both sides, was interrupted by a storm before victory had inclined to either army. The Romans, not a whit discouraged by so indecisive a struggle, prepared to do battle on the morrow; but the Volsci, when they reckoned up the men they had lost in the fighting, were by no means so eager to incur the danger a second time, and in the night marched off like beaten men

pro victis Antium agmine trepido sauciis ac parte 6 impedimentorum reicta abierunt. Armorum magna vis cum inter caesa hostium corpora tum in castris inventa est. Ea Luæ Matri dare se consul dixit finesque hostium usque ad oram maritimam est depopulatus.
 7 Alteri consuli Aemilio ingresso Sabellum agrum non castra Samnitium, non legiones usquam opposita. Ferro ignique vastantem agros legati 8 Samnitium pacem orantes adeunt; a quo reiecti ad
 senatum, potestate facta dicendi, positis ferocibus
 animis pacem sibi ab Romanis bellique ius adversus 9 Sidicinos petierunt, quae se eo iustius petere, quod et in amicitiam populi Romani secundis suis rebus, non adversis ut Campani, venissent, et adversus Sidicinos sumerent arma, suos semper hostes, populi 10 Romani nunquam amicos, qui nec ut Samnites in pace amicitiam nec ut Campani auxilium in bello petissent, nec in fide populi Romani nec in dicione essent.

II. Cum de postulatis Samnitium T. Aemilius
 praetor senatum consulisset reddendumque iis
 2 foedus patres censuerint, praetor Samnitibus respondit nec quo minus perpetua cum eis amicitia esset per populum Romanum stetisse, nec contradici
 quin, quoniam ipsos belli culpa sua contracti taedium

¹ i. e. as he burnt them: captured arms were sometimes burnt as an offering to Vulcan (I. xxxvii. 5), or to Jupiter Victor (x. xxix. 18). Lua Mater, wife of Saturn, was a goddess of atonement; at XLV. xxxiii. 1 she is associated in this rite with Mars and Minerva.

² Sabellus ager usually includes the territories in Central Italy inhabited by the Samnites, Sabines, Picentines, Vestini, Marsi, Paeligni, and Marrucini. Livy uses it here in a restricted sense of the country of the Samnites.

for Antium, with fear and trembling, abandoning B.C. 341 their wounded and a part of their baggage. A great quantity of arms was found, not only amongst the slain but also in the enemy's camp. Declaring¹ that he gave these arms to Lua Mater, the consul proceeded to lay waste the enemy's country as far as the coast.

The other consul, Aemilius, having entered the Sabellian² territory, nowhere encountered a Samnite camp or levies. As he was ravaging their fields with fire and sword, he was approached by Samnite envoys, who begged for peace. Being referred by Aemilius to the senate, they obtained an audience, and giving over their air of arrogance, besought the Romans to grant them peace and the right to war against the Sidicini. These requests, they said, were the more justifiable, inasmuch as they had become friends of the Roman People when their state was flourishing and not, like the Campanians, in their adversity; moreover, it was against the Sidicini that they were drawing the sword, a people always their enemies and never friendly to the Romans, of whom they had never, like the Samnites, sought friendship in time of peace, nor assistance, like the Campanians, in time of war; neither were they under the protection of the Roman People, nor yet their subjects.

II. Titus Aemilius the praetor laid the petition of the Samnites before the senate, and the Fathers voted to renew the treaty with them. The praetor then replied to the ambassadors that the Roman People had not been to blame for the interruption of the friendship, and that, since the Samnites were themselves grown weary of a war contracted through

3 ceperit, amicitia de integro reconcilietur; quod ad
 Sidicinos attineat, nihil intercedi quo minus Samniti
 4 populo pacis bellique liberum arbitrium sit. Foedere icto cum domum revertissent, extemplo inde exeritus Romanus deductus, annuo stipendio et trium mensum frumento accepto, quod pepigerat consul ut tempus indutiis daret quoad legati redissent.
 5 Samnites copiis iisdem quibus usi adversus Romanum bellum fuerant contra Sidicinos profecti, haud
 in dubia spe erant mature urbis hostium potiundae, 6 cum¹ ab Sidicinis deditio prius ad Romanos coepta fieri est; dein, postquam patres ut seram eam ultimaque tandem necessitate expressam aspernabantur, ad Latinos iam sua sponte in arma motos
 7 facta est. Ne Campani quidem—adeo iniuriae Samnitium quam beneficii Romanorum memoria 8 praesentior erat—his se armis abstinuere. Ex his tot populis unus ingens exercitus duce Latino fines Samnitium ingressus plus populationibus quam proe-liis cladium fecit; et quamquam superiores certaminibus Latini erant, haud inviti, ne saepius dimicandum 9 foret, agro hostium excessere. Id spatium Samnitibus datum est Romam legatos mittendi; qui cum adis-sent senatum, conquesti eadem se foederatos pati
 10 quae hostes essent passi, precibus infimis petiere ut

¹ cum A¹ or A^x: tum (before which P²F³O have a stop) Ω.

their own fault, they had no objection to renewing the covenant; as for the Sidicini, the Romans would not interfere with the free judgment of the Samnite People regarding peace and war. On the ratification of the treaty, the ambassadors went home, and the Roman army was at once recalled, after receiving a year's pay and rations for three months, which the consul had stipulated should be the price of a truce, to last until the envoys should return.

The Samnites marched against the Sidicini with the same forces which they had employed in the war with Rome, and were confidently hoping to capture the city of their enemies in a little while, when the Sidicini attempted to anticipate them by surrendering to the Romans. Then, after the Fathers had rejected their offer, on the ground that it came too late and had been wrung from them only by the direst necessity, they carried it to the Latins, who had already risen in arms on their own account. Even the Campanians—so much more vivid was their recollection of the injury done them by the Samnites than of the kindness of the Romans—could not refrain from joining in this expedition. One great army, gathered out of all these nations, invaded the borders of the Samnites, under a Latin general, but wrought more havoc by pillage than in battle; and although the Latins came off best in all encounters, they were not unwilling to retire from the enemy's country, that they might not have to fight so often. The Samnites thus had time to send ambassadors to Rome. Appearing before the senate, they complained that they were suffering the same treatment as allies that they had experienced while enemies, and besought the Romans, with the utmost humility,

satis ducerent Romani victoriam quam Samnitibus
 ex Campano Sidicinoque hoste eripuissent, ne vinci 11 etiam se ab ignavissimis populis sinerent; Latinos Campanosque, si sub dictione populi Romani essent, pro imperio arcerent Samniti agro, sin imperium 12 abnuerent, armis coercent. Adversus haec responsum anceps datum, quia fateri pigebat in potestate sua Latinos iam non esse, timebantque, 13 ne arguendo abalienarent: Campanorum aliam condicionem esse, qui non foedere sed per ditionem
 in fidem venissent; itaque Campanos, seu velint seu nolint, quieturos; in foedere Latinos nihil esse quod bellare cum quibus ipsi velint prohibeant.

III. Quod responsum sicut dubios Samnites quidnam facturum Romanum censerent dimisit, ita Cam-panos metu abalienavit, Latinos velut nihil iam non 2 concedentibus Romanis ferociores fecit. Itaque per speciem adversus Samnites belli parandi crebra concilia indicentes omnibus consultationibus inter se principes occulte Romanum coquebant bellum. Huic quoque adversus servatores suos bello Campanus
 3 aderat. Sed quamquam omnia de industria celabantur—priusquam moverentur Romani, tolli ab tergo Samnitem hostem volebant—tamen per quosdam privatis hospitiis necessitudinibusque coniunctos in-that they would be satisfied to have snatched from the grasp of the Samnites a victory over their Campanian and Sidicinian foes, and not suffer them actually to be conquered by the most cowardly of nations. If the Latins and Campanians were subject to the Roman People, let the Romans use their authority and keep them from invading Samnium: but if they rejected that authority, let them hold them in check by force of arms. To this plea the Romans returned an ambiguous reply, since they were loath to confess that the Latins were no longer under their control, and feared to estrange them if they censured them. The Campanians, they said, were upon a different footing, having come under their protection not by treaty but by surrender; accordingly the Campanians, whether willing or not, should keep the peace; but there was nothing in their treaty with the Latins which entitled them to prevent their going to war with whom they chose.
 8

B.C. 341

III. This answer, as it left the Samnites quite at a loss to forecast the Roman policy, so it alienated the Campanians with fear, while it persuaded the Latins that there was no longer any concession the Romans would not make them, and rendered them yet more audacious. Accordingly their leaders, under colour of forwarding the war against the Samnites, appointed numerous councils, and in all their deliberations secretly concocted war with Rome. In this war, too, the Campanians took part, against their preservers. But though all their measures were sedulously concealed—for they wished to shake off the Samnite foe behind them before the Romans should take the alarm—yet through certain persons connected by private ties of hospitality and kinship,

4 dicia coniurationis eius Romam emanarunt; iussisque ante tempus consulibus abdicare se magistratu, quo maturius novi consules adversus tantam molem belli crearentur, religio incessit, ab eis quorum imminutum imperium esset comitia haberet. Itaque interregnum 5 initum. Duo interreges fuere, M. Valerius ac M. Fabius; is creavit¹ consules T. Manlium Torquatum tertium, P. Decium Murem.

6 Eo anno Alexandrum Epiri regem in Italiam classem appulisse constat; quod bellum, si prima satis prospera fuissent, haud dubie ad Romanos 7 pervenisset. Eadem aetas rerum magni Alexandri est, quem sorore huius ortum in alio tractu orbis, invictum bellis, iuvenem fortuna extinxit.

8 Ceterum Romani, etsi defectio sociorum nominisque Latini haud dubia erat, tamen tamquam de Samnitibus non de se curauit agerent, decem principes Latinorum Romam evocaverunt, quibus imperarent 9 quae vellent. Praetores tum duos Latium habebat, L. Annium Setinum et L. Numisium Circiensem, ambo ex coloniis Romanis, per quos praeter Signiam² Velitrasque et ipsas colonias Romanas Volsci etiam exciti ad arma erant; eos nominatim evocari placuit.

10 Haud cuiquam dubium erat super qua re accirentur;

¹ is creavit cod. Sigon. (v. xxxi. 9): Fabius creavit Hertz: creauit Ω: creant U: creati A: creauerūt F³: creauere D³A³γ.

² Signiam UA¹? signia MOHTDL: signa PT².I: signium

¹ Alexander the Epirot's expedition is here placed too early by some ten years. The story of his death is told in chap. xxiv.

² Olympias, daughter of Neoptolemus.

information of the conspiracy leaked out and was brought to Rome. The consuls were commanded, before their time was up, to resign their office, in order that new consuls might the sooner be chosen to confront so momentous an invasion; but a scruple arose at allowing the election to be held by those whose authority had been abridged, and so they had an interregnum. There were two interreges, Marcus Valerius and Marcus Fabius: the latter announced the election to the consulship of Titus Manlius Torquatus (for the third time) and Publius Decius Mus.

It is believed to have been in this year that Alexander, king of Epirus, sailed with a fleet to Italy—a war which, had it prospered in its beginning, would doubtless have extended to the Romans.¹ This was also the era of the exploits of Alexander the Great, who was the son of this man's sister,² and was doomed to be cut off by sickness while a young man, in another quarter of the world, after proving himself to be invincible in war.

But the Romans, though quite certain that the allies and all the Latins were going to revolt, nevertheless, as if concerned not for themselves but for the Samnites, summoned to Rome the ten chief men of the Latins, that they might give them such commands as they might wish. Latium at that time had two praetors, Lucius Annius Setinus and Lucius Numisius Circēiensis, both from Roman colonies, through whose contrivance, besides Signia and Velitrae—likewise Roman colonies—even the Volsci had been induced to draw the sword. It was determined to summon these men by name. Nobody could be in doubt why they were sent for; accorditaque concilio prius habitu praetores quam Romam proficiscerentur evocatos se ab senatu docent Romano et quae actum iri secum credant, quidnam ad ea responderi placeat referunt.

IV. Cum aliud alii censerent, tum Annius : "Quamquam ipse ego rettuli quid responderi placeret, tamen magis ad summam rerum nostrarum pertinere arbitror quid agendum nobis quam quid loquendum sit. Facile erit explicatis consiliis accommodare rebus 2 verba. Nam si etiam nunc sub umbra foederis aequi servitutem pati possumus, quid abest quin proditis Sidicinis non Romanorum solum sed Samnitium quoque dicto pareamus respondeamusque 3 Romanis nos, ubi innuerint, posituros arma? Sin autem tandem libertatis desiderium remordet animos, si foedus,¹ si societas aequatio iuris est, si consanguineos nos Romanorum esse, quod olim pudebat, nunc gloriari licet, si socialis illis exercitus is est quo adiuncto duplicant vires suas, quem secernere ab se consilia² bellis propriis ponendis sumendisque 4 nolint, cur non omnia aequantur? Cur non alter ab Latinis consul datur? Ubi pars virium, ibi et 5 imperii pars esto.³ Est quidem nobis hoc per se haud nimis amplum, quippe concedentibus Romam caput Latio esse; sed ut amplum videri posset,

¹ si foedus Madvig: si foedus est Ω.

² consilia Madvig: consules Ω: consul TDLA.

³ esto Mehler: est Ω: ēē (= esse) M: est? F³H (Drakenborch): omitted by O.

B.C. 310

ingly, before setting out for Rome the praetors held a council, and explaining how they had been summoned by the Roman senate, asked instructions touching the answers they should give to the questions which they supposed would be put to them.

IV. While one was suggesting this thing and another that, Annius arose. "Notwithstanding I have myself referred to you," said he, "the question as to what our reply should be, nevertheless I consider that what we are to do is of more importance to the welfare of our nation than what we are to say. It will be easy, when we have straightened out our plans, to frame words suitable to our conduct. For if we are able even now to endure slavery under a shadowy pretence of equal treaty-rights, what is left for us but to give up the Sidicini, and obeying the behest not of the Romans only but also of the Samnites, make answer to the Romans that we are ready to lay down our arms at their beck and call? But if our hearts are pricked at last with a longing for liberty; if treaties, if alliances, mean equality of rights; if we may now glory in the kinship of the Romans, of which we were formerly ashamed; if they mean by "allied army" one which added to their own doubles its numbers, one which they would not wish to make its own war and peace, apart from them;—if these things are so, I say, why are not all things equalized? Why is not one consul furnished by the Latins? Where a portion of the strength is, there, too, should be a portion of the authority. For us, indeed, this is not in itself any too great an honour, since we suffer Rome to be the capital of Latium; but we have made it seem an

A.U.C.
414 6 diuturna patientia fecimus. Atqui si quando unquam consociandi imperii, usurpandae libertatis tempus optastis, en hoc tempus adest, et virtute vestra et 7 deum benignitate vobis datum. Temptastis pati-entiam negando militem; quis dubitat exarsisse eos, cum plus ducentorum annorum morem solve-8 remus? Pertulerunt tamen hunc dolorem. Bellum nostro nomine cum Paelignis gessimus; qui ne
 nostrorum quidem finium nobis per nos tuendorum 9 ius antea dabant nihil intercesserunt. Sidicinos in fidem receptos, Campanos ab se ad nos descisse, exercitus nos parare adversus Samnites, foederatos 10 suos, audierunt nec moverunt se ab urbe. Unde haec illis tanta modestia, nisi a conscientia virium et nostrarum et suarum? Idoneos auctores habeo querentibus de nobis Samnitibus ita responsum ab
 senatu Romano esse ut facile appareret ne ipsos quidem iam postulare ut Latium sub Romano imperio sit. Usurpate modo postulando¹ quod illi 11 vobis taciti concedunt. Si quem hoc metus dicere
 prohibet, en ego² ipse audiente non populo Romano
 modo senatuque sed Iove ipso, qui Capitólium incolit, profiteor me dicturum, ut si nos in foedere ac
 societate esse velint, consulem alterum ab nobis 12 senatusque partem accipient." Haec ferociter non suadenti solum sed pollicenti clamore et adsensu

¹ postulando M² or M¹ς: postulando. Eo TD: postulando eo Ω: postulando id ς.

² en ego A³ Gelenius: en̄go M: en PFUO: ego HTDLA:
 hem ego ς.

honour by our prolonged submissiveness. And yet, if ever at any time you have desired to share in the government and to use your freedom, behold, now is your opportunity, bestowed on you by your valour and by Heaven's favour! You have tried their patience by denying them troops; who can doubt that they were enraged when we broke the tradition of two hundred years? Yet they swallowed their resentment. We waged war on our own account with the Paeligni; those who aforetime withheld from us even the right to defend our own borders by ourselves, never interposed. They have heard how we received the Sidicini into our protection, how the Campanians have left them and joined us, how we are raising armies against the Samnites, their confederates,—and have not stirred from the City. Whence comes this great restraint on their part, if it come not from the consciousness of our strength—and their own? I have good authority for saying that when the Samnites were complaining of us, the Roman senate answered in such wise that it might readily appear that even the Romans themselves no longer demanded that Latium should be under their authority. Do but take up in your demands what they tacitly concede to you. If there is any man whom fear prevents from saying this, lo, I declare that I myself will say it, in the hearing not of the Roman People only and their senate, but of Jupiter himself, who dwells in the Capitol; that if they wish us to observe the treaty of alliance, they must receive from us one consul and a moiety of the senate." These bold encouragements, and even promises, were received with a general shout of approval, and Annius was empowered to act and speak as might seem con-

LIVY

omnes permiserunt ut ageret diceretque quae e re publica nominis Latini fideque sua viderentur.

V. Ubi est Romam ventum, in Capitolio eis senatus datus est. Ibi cum T. Manlius consul eisset cum eis ex auctoritate patrum, ne Samnitibus
2 foederatis bellum inferrent, Annius, tamquam victor
armis Capitolium cepisset, non legatus iure gentium 3 tutus loqueretur, "Tempus erat," inquit, "T. Manli vosque, patres conscripti, tandem iam vos nobiscum nihil pro imperio agere, cum florentissimum deum benignitate Latium¹ armis virisque, Samnitibus bello victis, Sidicinis Campanisque sociis, nunc etiam Volscis adiunetis, videretis; colonias quoque vestras Latinum 4 Romano praetulisse imperium. Sed quoniam vos regno impotenti finem ut imponatis non inducitis in animum, nos, quamquam armis possumus adserere Latium in libertatem, consanguinitati tamen hoc dabimus ut condiciones pacis feramus aequas utrisque, quoniam vires quoque aequari dis immortalibus
5 placuit. Consulem alterum Roma, alterum ex Latio creari oportet, senatus partem aequam ex utraque
gente esse, unum populum, unam rem publicam 6 fieri; et ut imperii eadem sedes sit idemque omnibus nomen, quoniam ab altera utra parte concedi necessere est, quod utrisque bene vertat, sit haec sane patria potior, et Romani omnes vocemur."

¹ Latium Madrig: nunc (tunc M) Latium Ω.

B.C. 340

ducive to the welfare of the Latin state and befitting his own honour.

V. On the arrival of the Latins in Rome, they were given audience of the senate in the Capitol. There, after Titus Manlius the consul had pleaded with them, as directed by the senate, to make no war upon the Samnites, united as they were by treaty with the Romans, Annius held forth like some conqueror who had taken the Capitol by storm, not like an envoy protected by the law of nations. "It was high time, Titus Manlius," he said, "and you, Conscrip^t Fathers, that you should cease at length to deal with us as in any sort our rulers, perceiving, as you have, that Latium, by Heaven's blessing, is flourishing exceedingly in arms and men, after vanquishing the Samnites in war and receiving as allies the Sidicini and Campanians, and now even the Volsci besides, and that your own colonies as well have preferred the Latin to the Roman sway. But, since you cannot make up your minds to bring your impotent sovereignty to a close, we—though able by force of arms to give Latium her freedom—will nevertheless concede so much to kinship as to offer terms of peace fair and equal to both sides, since the immortal gods have willed that we should bē of equal strength. One consul should be chosen from Rome, the other from Latium, the senate should be drawn in equal proportions from both nations, there should be one people and one state; and that we may have the same seat of empire and the same name for all, by all means let this rather be our city, since one side must make concessions,—and may good come of it to both peoples!—and let us all be known as Romans."

7 Forte ita accidit ut parem ferociae huius et Romani consulem T. Manlium haberent, qui adeo non tenuit iram ut, si tanta dementia patres conscriptos cepisset
 ut ab Setino homine leges acciperent, gladio cinctum in senatum venturum se esse palam diceret, et quemcumque in curia Latinum vidisset, sua manu 8 interempturum. Et conversus ad simulacrum Iovis,
 "Audi, Iuppiter, haec scelera" inquit; "audite, Ius Fasque. Peregrinos consules et peregrinum senatum in tuo, Iuppiter, augurato templo captus atque ipse¹ 9 oppressus visurus es! Haecine foedera Tullus, Romanus rex, cum Albanis, patribus vestris, Latini, 10 haec L. Tarquinius vobiscum postea fecit? Non venit in mentem pugna² apud Regillum lacum?
 Adeo et clodium veterum vestrarum et beneficiorum
 nostrorum erga vos obliti estis?"

VI. Cum consulis vocem subsecuta patrum indignatio esset, proditur memoriae adversus cerebram implorationem deum, quos testes foederum saepius
 invocabant consules, vocem Anni spernentis numina 2 Iovis Romani auditam. Certe, cum commotus ira se a vestibulo templi citato gradu proriperet, lapsus per gradus capite graviter offenso impactus imo ita 3 est saxo ut sopiretur. Exanimatum auctores quoniam non omnes sunt, mihi quoque in incerto relictum sit,
 sicut inter foederum ruptorum testationem ingenti fragore caeli procellam effusam; nam et vera esse et apte ad repraesentandam iram deum ficta possunt.

¹ atque ipse Κ: ipse atque Alscheski.

² pugna Κ: pugnam Μ: pugnae Gronovius.

¹ See Book I., chap. xxiv and chap. lii.

It so happened that the Romans had, in their consul Titus Manlius, a man who was a match for Annius in boldness. So far was he from controlling his indignation, that he openly declared that if the Fathers were so demented as to receive terms from a Setine, he would gird on his sword, and entering the senate would slay with his own hand any Latin he might see within the Curia. And turning to the statue of the god, "Hear, Jupiter," he cried, "these wicked words! Hear ye, Law and Right! Shalt thou behold, O Jupiter, alien consuls and an alien senate in thy consecrated temple, thyself overpowered and taken captive? Are these the covenants, Latins, that Tullus, the Roman king, made with your Alban forefathers, that Lucius Tarquinius afterwards made with you?"¹ Remember you not the battle at Lake Regillus? Have you so forgot your old disasters and our goodness to you?"

VI. The consul's speech having been warmly seconded by the indignant senators, it is recorded that in answer to the numerous supplications of the gods, whom the consuls repeatedly invoked as the witnesses of treaties, the voice of Annius was heard spurning the power of the Roman Jupiter. At all events, as he hurried, beside himself with rage, from the entrance of the temple, he slipped on the stairs, and struck his head so hard on the lowest stone that he lost consciousness. That he was killed is not asserted by all writers, wherefore I, too, may leave the question undecided, as also the tradition that while men were calling on the gods to witness the breaking of the treaty, there was a loud crash in the heavens, and a hurricane burst forth; for these things may be true, or they may be apt inventions to express in a

LIVY

v.c.
114

4 Torquatus missus ab senatu ad dimittendos legatos
 5 cum iacentem Annium vidisset, exclamat, ita ut populo patribusque audita vox pariter sit: "Bene habet; di pium movere bellum. Est caeleste numen;
 es, magne Iuppiter; haud frustra te patrem deum
 6 hominumque hac sede saceravimus. Quid cessatis, Quirites, vosque patres conscripti, arma capere deis ducibus? Sic stratas legiones Latinorum dabo, 7 quemadmodum legatum iacentem videtis." Adsensu populi excepta vox consulis tantum ardoris animis fecit, ut legatos proficiscentes cura magistratum magis, qui iussu consulis prosequabantur, quam ius gentium ab ira impetuque hominum tegeret.

8 Consensit et senatus bellum; consulesque duobus scriptis exercitibus per Marsos Paelignosque profecti adiuncto Samnitium exercitu ad Capuam, quo iam 9 Latini sociique convenerant, castra locant. Ibi in quiete utriusque consuli eadem dicitur visa species
 viri maioris quam pro humano habitu augustiorisque,
 10 dicentis ex una acie imperatorem, ex altera exercitum Deis Manibus Matrique Terrae deberi; utrius exer-citus imperator legiones hostium superque eas se 11 devovisset, eius populi partisque victoriam fore. Hos ubi nocturnos visus inter se consules contulerunt, placuit averruncandae deum irae victimas caedi;

lively manner the wrath of Heaven. Torquatus, who had been sent by the senate to dismiss the envoys, saw Annus lying there, and exclaimed in a voice that was heard alike by the people and the senators: "It is well; the gods have begun a righteous war. There is a heavenly power; thou dost exist, great Jupiter; not in vain have we established thee in this holy seat, the Father of gods and men. Why do you hesitate to arm, Quirites, and you Conscription Fathers, with the gods to lead you? As you behold their ambassador brought low, even so will I cast down the Latin legions." The consul's words were received with approval by the people, and so enraged them, that the envoys, at their setting out, owed their protection from men's wrath and fury more to the care of the magistrates—who attended them at the consul's bidding—than to the law of nations.

The senate also agreed on war; and the consuls, enrolling two armies, marched out through the country of the Marsi and Paeligni, and having added to their forces the army of the Samnites, went into camp near Capua, where the Latins and their allies had already assembled. There in the stillness of the night both consuls are said to have been visited by the same apparition, a man of greater than human stature and more majestic, who declared that the commander of one side, and the army of the other, must be offered up to the Manes and to Mother Earth; and that in whichever host the general should devote to death the enemy's legions, and himself with them, that nation and that side would have the victory. When the consuls had compared these visions of the night, they resolved that victims should be slain to turn away the wrath of Heaven;

simul ut, si extis eadem quae in somnio¹ visa fuerant portenderentur, alter uter consulum fata impleret.

12 Ubi responsa haruspicum insidenti iam animo tacitae religioni congruerunt, tum adhibitis legatis tribunisque et imperiis deum propalam expositis, ne mors voluntaria consulis exercitum in acie terreret,

13 comparant inter se ut ab ultra parte cedere Romanus exercitus coepisset, inde se consul devoveret pro

14 populo Romano Quiritibusque. Agitatum etiam in consilio est ut, si quando unquam severo ullum imperio bellum administratum esset, tunc utique² disciplina militaris ad priscos redigeretur mores.

15 Curam acuebat quod adversus Latinos bellandum erat, lingua, moribus, armorum genere, institutis ante omnia militaribus, congruentes; milites militibus, centurionibus centuriones, tribuni tribunis compares collegaeque iisdem in³ praesidiis, saepe iisdem mani-

16 pulis permixti fuerant. Per haec ne quo errore milites caperentur, edicunt consules, ne quis extra ordinem in hostem pugnaret.

VII. Forte inter ceteros turmarum praefectos, qui exploratum in omnes partes dimissi erant, T. Manlius consulis filius super castra hostium cum suis turmalibus evasit, ita ut vix teli iactu ab statione 2 proxima abesset. Ibi Tusculani erant equites; praeerat Geminus Maecius, vir cum genere inter and, at the same time, that if the warning of the entrails should coincide with what they had seen in their dream, one or other of the consuls should fulfil the decrees of fate. The report of the soothsayers agreed with the secret conviction which had already found lodgment in their breasts; whereupon they sent for their lieutenants and the tribunes, and having openly declared the pleasure of the gods, that so the consul's voluntary death might not terrify the soldiers in the fray, they agreed with one another that on whichever flank the Roman army should begin to yield, there the consul should devote himself in behalf of the Roman People and Quirites. It was also urged in the council that if ever any war had been conducted with stern authority, now was the occasion of all others for recalling military discipline to its ancient courses. Their anxiety was sharpened by the fact that they must fight against the Latins, who were like themselves in language, customs, fashion of arms, and above all in military institutions; soldiers had mingled with soldiers, centurions with centurions, tribunes with tribunes, as equals and colleagues in the same garrisons and often in the same maniples. Lest this might betray the soldiers into some blunder, the consuls proclaimed that no man should quit his place to attack the foe.

¹ in somnio Wesenberg: somnio Ω: somnia (with visu) F.

² utique Sigonius: uti Ω.

³ iisdem in Conway: in iisdem Wesenberg: iisdem (or isdem or hisdem) Ω.

VII. It chanced that amongst the other squadron-leaders who had been sent off in all directions to reconnoitre, Titus Manlius the consul's son had ridden out with his troopers beyond the enemy's camp, till he was hardly the cast of a spear from their nearest outpost. There the Tuscan horse were stationed, under the command of Geminus Maecius, who enjoyed a reputation amongst his

LIVY

3 suos tum factis clarus. Is ubi Romanos equites insignemque inter eos praecedentem consulis filium
 —nam omnes inter se, utique illustres viri, noti 4 erant—cognovit, “Unane,” ait, “turma, Romani, cum Latinis sociisque bellum gesturi estis? Quid interea consules, quid duo exercitus consulares
 5 agent?” “Aderunt in tempore,” Manlius inquit, “et cum illis aderit Iuppiter ipse, foederum a vobis
 6 violatorum testis, qui plus potest polletque. Si ad Regillum lacum ad satietatem vestram pugnavimus, hic quoque efficiemus profecto ne nimis acies vobis
 7 et conlata signa nobiscum cordi sint.” Ad ea Geminus paulum ab suis equo provectus: “Visne igitur, dum dies ista venit, qua magno conatu exer-citus moveatis, interea tu ipse congregdi mecum, ut nostro duorum iam hinc eventu cernatur, quantum 8 eques Latinus Romano praestet?” Movet ferocem animum iuvenis seu ira seu detractandi certaminis pudor seu inexsuperabilis vis fati. Oblitus itaque imperii patrii consulumque edicti, praeeeps ad id
 certamen agitur, quo vinceret an vinceretur haud 9 multum interesset. Equitibus ceteris velut ad spectaculum submotis, spatio quod vacui interiacebat campi adversos concitant equos; et cum infestis
 cuspidibus concurrisserint, Manli cuspis super galeam

fellows for his achievements no less than for his noble birth. This man recognized the Roman cavalry, and, conspicuous in their van, the consul's son—for they were all known to one another, particularly the men of mark. “Come now,” he cried, “will you Romans wage war on the Latins and their allies with a single squadron? What will the consuls, what will two consular armies be doing in the meantime?” “They will be here soon enough,” said Manlius, “and with them will be Jupiter himself, the witness of those covenants which you have violated, who is mightier and more powerful than they. If at Lake Regillus we gave you your fill of fighting, here likewise we shall certainly see to it that you have no great joy of meeting us in the serried ranks of battle.” At this, Geminus rode out a little in front of his men, and asked, “Would you like then, while waiting for that great day to come, when with a mighty effort you are to set your hosts in motion—would you like meanwhile, I say, to do battle with me, yourself, that from the outcome of our duel men may see at once how far the Latin horse surpass the Roman?” The youth’s bold heart was stirred, whether by anger, or by shame at the thought of refusing the combat, or by the irresistible force of destiny. And so, forgetting the commands of his father and the edict of the consuls, he allowed himself to be swept headlong into an encounter where it would make little difference to him whether he won or lost. They caused the rest of the horsemen to stand back, as though it had been a spectacle, and spurred their steeds against one another across the vacant space between. With lances levelled they rushed together; but the lance of Manlius glanced off

A.U.C. 414 10 hostis, Maeci trans cervicem equi elapsa est. Circumactis deinde equis cum prior ad iterandum ictum Manlius consurrexisset, spiculum inter aures equi fixit. Ad cuius volneris sensum cum equus prioribus pedibus erectis magna vi caput quateret, excussit 11 equitem, quem cuspide parmaque innixum attollentem se ab gravi casu Manlius ab iugulo, ita ut per costas 12 ferrum emineret, terrae adfixit; spoliisque lectis ad suos revectus, cum ovante gaudio turma in castra atque inde ad praetorium ad patrem tendit, ignaru fati¹ futurique, laus an poena merita esset.

13 "Ut me omnes," inquit, "pater, tuo sanguine ortum vere ferrent, provocatus equestria haec spolia 14 capta ex hoste caeso porto." Quod ubi audivit consul, extemplo filium aversatus contionem classico 15 advocari iussit. Quae ubi frequens convenit, "Quandoque," inquit, "tu, T. Manli, neque imperium consulare neque maiestatem patriam veritus adversus edictum nostrum extra ordinem in hostem pugnasti, 16 et quantum in te fuit, disciplinam militarem, qua stetit ad hanc diem Romana res, solvisti, meque in eam necessitatem adduxisti, ut aut rei publicae mihi 17 aut mei² obliviscendum sit, nos potius nostro delicto plectemur quam res publica tanto suo damno nostra peccata luat. Triste exemplum sed in posterum the helmet of his enemy, and that of Maecius passed over the neck of the other's horse. Then, as they pulled their horses round, Manlius, who was the first to gather himself up for a second thrust, pricked his enemy's charger between the ears. The smart of this wound made the horse rear and toss his head so violently that he threw off his rider, who, raising himself with spear and shield, was struggling to his feet after the heavy fall, when Manlius plunged his lance into his throat so that it came out between the ribs and pinned him to the ground. He then gathered up the spoils and rode back to his troopers, who attended him with shouts of triumph to the camp, where he sought at once the headquarters of his father, knowing not what doom the future held for him, or whether praise or punishment were his appointed guerdon.

¹ fati T² Frag. Haverk. ζ : facti Ω .

² mei Conway: mei niorum Ω : mei meorumue H: mei meorumque F³ U D³ A² ζ .

"Father," he said, "that all men might truly report me to be your son, I bring these equestrian spoils, stripped from the body of an enemy who challenged me." On hearing this, the consul straightway turned from his son and commanded a trumpet to sound the assembly. When the men had gathered in full numbers, the consul said, "Inasmuch, Titus Manlius, as you have held in reverence neither consular authority nor a father's dignity, and despite our edict have quitted your place to fight the enemy, and so far as in you lay, have broken military discipline, whereby the Roman state has stood until this day unshaken, thus compelling me to forget either the republic or myself, we will sooner endure the punishment of our wrong-doing than suffer the republic to expiate our sins at a cost so heavy to herself; we will set a stern example, but a salutary

A.U.C. 18 salubre iuventuti erimus. Me quidem cum ingenita ⁴¹⁴ caritas liberum tum specimen istud virtutis deceptum 19 vana imagine decoris in te movet; sed cum aut morte tua sancienda sint consulm imperia aut impunitate in perpetuum abroganda, nec¹ te quidem, si quid in te nostri sanguinis est, recusare censem
 quin disciplinam militarem culpa tua prolapsam poena restituas—i, lictor, deliga ad palum.”

20 Exanimati omnes tam atroci imperio nec aliter
 quam in se quisque destictam cernentes securem, 21 metu magis quam modestia quievere. Itaque velut demerso² ab admiratione animo cum silentio defixi stetissent, repente, postquam cervice caesa fusus est
 cruor, tam³ libero conquestu coortae voces sunt ut
 neque lamentis neque exsecrationibus parceretur, 22 spoliisque contectum iuvenis corpus, quantum militaribus studiis funus ullum concelebrari potest, structo extra vallum rogo cremaretur, Manlianaque imperia
 non in praesentia modo horrenda sed exempli etiam tristis in posterum essent.

VIII. Fecit tamen atrocitas poenae oboedientiorem duci militem, et praeterquam quod custodiae vigiliaeque et ordo stationum intentioris ubique curae
 erant, in ultimo etiam certamine, cum descensum
 2 in aciem est, ea severitas profuit. Fuit autem civili maxime bello pugna similis; adeo nihil apud

¹ nec Ω Walters (who punctuates as in the text restituas—):
 ne Iuc. Gronovius (with full stop after restituas).

² demerso M. Mueller (D has uelud for uelut): emerso Ω merso Madrig: veluti merso Zingerle.

³ tam Crévier: tum Ω.

B.C. 340

one, for the young men of the future. For my own part, I am moved, not only by a man's instinctive love of his children, but by this instance you have given of your bravery, perverted though it was by an idle show of honour. But since the authority of the consuls must either be established by your death, or by your impunity be forever abrogated, and since I think that you yourself, if you have a drop of my blood in you, would not refuse to raise up by your punishment the military discipline which through your misdemeanour has slipped and fallen,—go, lictor, bind him to the stake."

All were astounded at so shocking a command; every man looked upon the axe as lifted against himself, and they were hushed with fear more than with reverence. And so, after standing, as if lost in wonder, rooted to the spot, suddenly, when the blood gushed forth from the severed neck, their voices burst out in such unrestrained upbraiding that they spared neither laments nor curses; and covering the young man's body with his spoils, they built a pyre outside the rampart, where they burned it with all the honours that can possibly attend a soldier's funeral; and the "orders of Manlius" not only caused men to shudder at the time, but became a type of severity with succeeding ages.

VIII. Nevertheless the brutality of the punishment made the soldiers more obedient to their general; and not only were guard-duties, watches, and the ordering of outposts, everywhere more carefully observed, but in the final struggle, as well, when the troops had gone down into battle, that stern act did much good. Now the battle was exceedingly like the battles in a civil war, so little

Latinos dissonum ab Romana re praeter animos erat.

3 Clipeis antea Romani¹ usi sunt; dein, postquam stipendiarii facti sunt, scuta pro clipeis fecere; et quod antea phalanx similis² Macedonicis, hoc postea 4 manipulatim structa acies coepit esse: postremi³ in 5 plures ordines instruebantur. Prima acies hastati erant, manipuli quindecimi, distantes inter se modicum spatum; manipulus leves⁴ vicenos milites, aliam turbam scutatorum habebat; leves autem qui hastam tantum gaesaque gererent vocabantur. 6 Haec prima frons in acie⁵ florem iuvenum pubescentium ad militiam habebat. Robustior inde aetas totidem manipulorum, quibus principibus est nomen, hos sequebantur, scutati omnes, insignibus maxime 7 armis. Hoc triginta manipulorum agmen antepilanos appellabant, quia sub signis iam alii quindecim ordines locabantur, ex quibus ordo unusquisque tres partes habebat — earum unam quamque primam⁶ 8 pilum vocabant; tribus ex vexillis constabat ordo; sexagenos milites, duos centuriones, vexillarium unum habebat⁷ vexillum; centum octoginta sex homines erant; primum vexillum triarios ducebat, veteranum militem spectatae virtutis, secundum rorarios, minus roboris aetate factisque, tertium

¹ Romani *M*¹ (*or M*²) *H*¹ (*or H*²) Frag. Haverk. ζ : romanis Ω .

² phalanx similis Luterbacher: phalanges similes Ω : phalange similes *A*⁴.

³ postremi Ortmann (and M?): postremo M or *M*¹ Ω .

⁴ leves Gruter: leuis Ω .

⁵ frons in acie *F*³ *L*³ *A*⁴: frons in aciem U: foris in aciem (acē H) Ω : in aciem foris L: sors in acie Conway.

⁶ primam Lipsius: primum Ω .

⁷ The words ordo . . . habebat are placed here by Conway (Class Quart. 12 (1918) pp. 9–14), who punctuates as in the

did the Latins differ from the Romans in anything but courage.

The Romans had formerly used small round shields; then, after they began to serve for pay, they made oblong shields instead of round ones; and what had before been a phalanx, like the Macedonian phalanxes, came afterwards to be a line of battle formed by maniples, with the rearmost troops drawn up in a number of companies. The first line, or hastati, comprised fifteen maniples, stationed a short distance apart; the maniple had twenty light-armed soldiers, the rest of their number carried oblong shields; moreover those were called "light-armed" who carried only a spear and javelins. This front line in the battle contained the flower of the young men who were growing ripe for service. Behind these came a line of the same number of maniples, made up of men of a more stalwart age; these were called the principes; they carried oblong shields and were the most showily armed of all. This body of thirty maniples they called antepilani, because behind the standards there were again stationed other fifteen companies, each of which had three sections, the first section in every company being known as pilus. The company consisted of three vexilla or "banners"; a single vexillum had sixty soldiers, two centurions, one vexillarius, or colour-bearer; the company numbered a hundred and eighty-six men. The first banner led the triarii, veteran soldiers of proven valour; the second banner the rorarii, younger and less distinguished men; the text, making vexillum subj. of habebat: the MSS. give them after instruebantur (§ 4).

accensos, minimae fiduciae manum ; eo et in postremam aciem reiciebantur.

9 Ubi his ordinibus exercitus instructus esset, hastati omnium primi pugnam inibant. Si hastati profigare hostem non possent, pede presso eos retro cedentes in intervalla ordinum principes recipiebant. Tum 10 principum pugna erat ; hastati sequebantur. Triarii sub vexillis considebant sinistro crure porrecto, scuta innixa umeris, hastas suberecta cuspide in terra fixas, haud secus quam vallo saepa inhorreret acies, 11 tenentes. Si apud principes quoque haud satis prospere esset pugnatum, a prima acie ad triarios se sensim referebant.¹ (Inde rem ad triarios redisse, cum 12 laboratur, proverbio increbruit.) Triarii consurgentes, ubi in intervalla ordinum suorum principes et hastatos recepissent, extemplo compressis ordinibus velut claudebant vias, unoque continent agmine 13 iam nulla spe post relicta in hostem incidebant ; id erat formidolosissimum hosti, cum velut victos insecuri novam repente aciem exsurgentem, auctam 14 numero, cernebant. Scribebantur autem quattuor fere legiones quinis milibus peditum, equitibus in singulas legiones trecentis.

Alterum tantum ex Latino dilectu adiciebatur,

¹ se sensim referebant Madrig : sensim referebantur Ω : redisse referebantur DA : redisse referebant L : retro se referebant L² or L¹ (margin).

¹ Of this account of the reorganization of the army see the discussion by Professor Conway (Class. Quart. 12 (1918) 9–14). The writer concludes that “in the army which Livy was describing there were only 10 maniples of Hastati, 10 of Principes, and 10 ordines of the third division (Triarii + Rorarii + Accensi). Then the numeration becomes clear; the third division has 3 times 600, i.e. 1800; each of the third banner the accensi, who were the least dependable, and were, for that reason, assigned to the rear-most line.

When an army had been marshalled in this fashion, the hastati were the first of all to engage. If the hastati were unable to defeat the enemy, they retreated slowly and were received into the intervals between the companies of the principes. The principes then took up the fighting and the hastati followed them. The triarii knelt beneath their banners, with the left leg advanced, having their shields leaning against their shoulders and their spears thrust into the ground and pointing obliquely upwards, as if their battle-line were fortified with a bristling palisade. If the principes, too, were unsuccessful in their fight, they fell back slowly from the battle-line on the triarii. (From this arose the adage, "to have come to the triarii," when things are going badly.) The triarii, rising up after they had received the principes and hastati into the intervals between their companies, would at once draw their companies together and close the lanes, as it were; then, with no more reserves behind to count on, they would charge the enemy in one compact array. This was a thing exceedingly disheartening to the enemy, who, pursuing those whom they supposed they had conquered, all at once beheld a new line rising up, with augmented numbers. There were customarily four legions raised of five thousand foot each, with three hundred horse to every legion.¹

An equivalent contingent used to be added from first two has 1600, each maniple running to 160. This gives $1800 + 2(1600) = 5000$, Livy's total."

A.U.C.
414

qui ea tempestate hostes erant Romanis eodemque 15 ordine instruxerant aciem; nec vexilla cum vexillis tautum, universi hastati cum hastatis, principes cum principibus, sed centurio quoque cum centurione, si
 ordines turbati non essent, concurrendum sibi esse 16 sciebat. Duo primi pili ex utraque acie inter triarios erant, Romanus corpore haudquaquam satis validus, 17 ceterum strenuus vir peritusque militiae, Latinus viribus ingens bellatorque primus, notissimi inter 18 se, quia pares semper ordines duxerant.¹ Romano haud satis fidenti viribus iam Romae permissum erat ab consulibus, ut subcenturionem sibi quem vellet legeret qui tutaretur eum ab uno destinato
 hoste; isque iuvenis in acie oblatus ex centurione Latino vitoriam tulit.

19 Pugnatum est haud procul radicibus Vesuvii montis, qua via ad Veserim ferebat. IX. Romani consules, priusquam educerent in aciem, immolaverunt. Decio caput iocineris a familiari parte caesum haruspex dicitur ostendisse: alioqui acceptam
 dis hostiam esse; Manlium egregie litasse. "Atqui bene habet" inquit Decius, "si ab collega litatum
 2 est." Instructis, sicut ante dictum est, ordinibus processere in aciem. Manlius dextro, Decius laevo 3 cornu praeerat. Primo utrimque aequis viribus, eodem ardore animorum gerebatur res; deinde ab

¹ duxerant ; : duxerunt Ω.

¹ A river (Aurelius Victor, 26.4), or possibly a town.

² The "head of the liver" was a protuberance on the upper part of the right (i.e. Roman) lobe. In the present instance this protuberance had the appearance of being mutilated, and so constituted a presage of evil to Decius.

the levy of the Latins, who were now the enemies B.C. 340 of the Romans and had drawn up their battle-line in the same formation; and they knew that not only must section meet in battle with section, hastati with hastati, principes with principes, but even—if the companies were not disordered—centurion with centurion. In either army the primus pilus, or chief centurion, was with the triarii. The Roman was far from strong in body, but was an energetic man and an experienced soldier; the Latin was a man of might and a first-rate warrior; they were well acquainted with each other, because they had always commanded companies of equal rank. The Roman, putting no confidence in his strength, had obtained permission from the consuls before leaving Rome to choose whom he liked for his deputy-centurion, to defend him from the one man marked out for his opponent. This youth, encountering the Latin centurion in the battle, won the victory over him.

The engagement came off not far from the foot of Mount Vesuvius, where the road led to Veseris.¹ IX. The Roman consuls before leading their troops into battle offered sacrifices. It is said that the soothsayer pointed out to Decius that the head of the liver was wounded on the friendly side; but that the victim was in all other respects acceptable to the gods,² and that the sacrifice of Manlius had been greatly successful. “It is well enough,” said Decius, “if my colleague has received favourable tokens.” In the formation already described they advanced into the field. Manlius commanded the right wing, Decius the left. In the beginning the strength of the combatants and their ardour were equal on both sides; but after a time the Roman laevo cornu hastati Romani, non ferentes impres-4 sionem Latinorum, se ad principes receperere. In hac trepidatione Decius consul M. Valerium magna voce inclamat: "Deorum" inquit "ope, M.¹ Valeri, opus est; agedum, pontifex publicus populi Romani,

 praei verba quibus me pro legionibus devoveam." 5 Pontifex eum togam praetextam sumere iussit et velato capite, manu subter togam ad mentum exserta, super telum subiectum pedibus stantem sic 6 dicere: "Iane Iuppiter Mars pater Quirine Bellona Lares Divi Novensiles Di Indigetes Divi quorum
 est potestas nostrorum hostiumque Dique Manes, 7 vos precor veneror veniam peto oroque² uti populo Romano Quiritium vim victoriam prosperetis, hostes-que populi Romani Quiritium terrore formidine 8 morteque adficiatis. Sicut verbis nuncupavi, ita pro re publica populi Romani³ Quiritium, exercitu legionibus auxiliis populi Romani Quiritium, legiones auxiliaque hostium mecum Deis Manibus Tellurique devoveo."

9 Haec ita precatus lictores ire ad T. Manlium iubet matureque collegae se devotum pro exercitu nuntiare. Ipse incinctus cinctu Gabino, armatus

¹ ope, M. Alschesfski: open M.: ope Ω: omitted by L.

² oroque Forchhammer: feroque Ω.

³ pro re publica populi Romani Quiritium Gronovius: pro
 ῥ π quiritium Ω: pro π ῥ quiritium U.

¹ See chap. iii. § 5. Apparently it was the custom for a member of the pontifical college to accompany the army in order to preside over important rites.

² Indiges probably means "belonging to a certain place," and di Indigites would be native, as contrasted with the di Novensiles (or Novensides), who were immigrants or new settlers in the Roman Pantheon.

B.C. 340

hastati on the left, unable to withstand the pressure of the Latins, fell back upon the principes. In the confusion of this movement Decius the consul called out to Marcus Valerius in a loud voice: "We have need of Heaven's help, Marcus Valerius.¹ Come therefore, state pontiff of the Roman People, dictate the words, that I may devote myself to save the legions." The pontiff bade him don the purple-bordered toga, and with veiled head and one hand thrust out from the toga and touching his chin, stand upon a spear that was laid under his feet, and say as follows: "Janus, Jupiter, Father Mars, Quirinus, Bellona, Lares, divine Novensiles, divine Indigites,² ye gods in whose power are both we and our enemies, and you, divine Manes,—I invoke and worship you, I beseech and crave your favour, that you prosper the might and the victory of the Roman People of the Quirites, and visit the foes of the Roman People of the Quirites with fear, shuddering, and death. As I have pronounced the words, even so in behalf of the republic of the Roman People of the Quirites, and of the army, the legions, the auxiliaries of the Roman People of the Quirites, do I devote the legions and auxiliaries of the enemy, together with myself, to the divine Manes and to Earth."

Having uttered this prayer he bade the lictors go to Titus Manlius and lose no time in announcing to his colleague that he had devoted himself for the good of the army. He then girded himself with the Gabinian cineture,³ and vaulting, armed, upon ¹ A peculiar mode of wearing the toga usual in certain rites and possessing the advantage of rendering the robe less cumbersome.

LIVY

in equum insiluit ac se in medios hostes immisit, 10 conspectus ab utraque acie, aliquanto augustior
 humano visu, sicut caelo missus piaculum omnis
 deorum irae, qui pestem ab suis aversam in hostes 11 ferret. Ita omnis terror pavorque cum illo latus signa prima Latinorum turbavit, deinde in totam 12 penitus aciem pervasit. Evidentissimum id fuit, quod quacumque equo inyectus est, ibi haud secus
 quam pestifero sidere icti pavebant; ubi vero corruit obrutus telis, inde iam haud dubie consternatae cohortes Latinorum fugam ac vastitatem late fece-13 runt. Simul et Romani exsolutis religione animis velut tum primum signo dato coorti pugnam integrum 14 ediderunt; nam et rorarii procurrebant inter antepilanos addebantque¹ vires hastatis ac principibus, et triarii genu dextro innixi nutum consulis ad consurgendum exspectabant.

X. Procedente deinde certamine cum aliis partibus multitudo superaret Latinorum, Manlius consul audito eventu collegae cum, ut ius fasque erat, lacrimis non minus quam laudibus debitissimis prosecutus 2 tam memorabilem mortem esset, paulisper addubitavit an consurgendi iam triariis tempus esset;
 deinde melius ratus integros eos ad ultimum dis-crimen servari, accensos ab novissima acie ante signa
 3 procedere iubet. Qui ubi subiere, extemplo Latini,

¹ addebantque Alscheski: adderantque M: addid'adid-F)erantque Ω.

his horse, plunged into the thick of the enemy, a conspicuous object from either army and of an aspect more august than a man's, as though sent from heaven to expiate all anger of the gods, and to turn aside destruction from his people and bring it on their adversaries. Thus every terror and dread attended him, and throwing the Latin front into disarray, spread afterwards throughout their entire host. This was most clearly seen in that, wherever he rode, men cowered as though blasted by some baleful star; but when he fell beneath a rain of missiles, from that instant there was no more doubt of the consternation of the Latin cohorts, which everywhere abandoned the field in flight. At the same time the Romans—their spirits relieved of religious fears—pressed on as though the signal had just then for the first time been given, and delivered a fresh attack; for the rorarii were running out between the antepilani and were joining their strength to that of the hastati and the principes, and the triarii, kneeling on the right knee, were waiting till the consul signed to them to rise.

X. While the struggle continued, and in some parts of the field the Latins were prevailing by reason of their numbers, the consul Manlius learned of his colleague's end, and having paid to so memorable a death—as justice and piety demanded—its well-merited meed of tears as well as praise, he was for a little while in doubt whether the moment were yet come for the triarii to rise; but afterwards deeming it better to keep them fresh for the final push, he commanded the accensi to advance from the rear before the standards. No sooner had they gone up, than the Latins, supposing their enemies had done

tamquam idem adversarii fecissent, triarios suos excitaverunt; qui aliquamdiu pugna atroci cum et semet ipsi fatigassent et hastas aut praefregissent aut hebetassent, pellerent tamen¹ hostem, debellatum iam rati per ventumque ad extremam aciem, 4 tum consul triariis "Consurgite nunc" inquit, "integri adversus fessos, memores patriae parentumque
 et coniugum ac liberorum, memores consulis pro 5 vestra victoria morte occubantis." Ubi triarii con-surrexerunt integri refulgentibus armis, nova ex
 improviso exorta acies, receptis in intervalla ordinum 6 antepilanis, clamore sublato principia Latinorum perturbant hastisque ora fodientes primo robore virorum caeso per alios manipulos velut inermes prope intacti evasere tantaque caede perrupere
 cuneos ut vix quartam partem relinquerent hostium.
 7 Samnites quoque sub radicibus montis procul instructi praebuere terrorem Latinis.

Ceterum inter omnes cives sociosque praecipua
 laus eius belli penes consules fuit, quorum alter
 omnes minas periculaque ab deis superis inferisque 8 in se unum vertit, alter ea virtute eoque consilio
 in proelio fuit ut facile convenerit inter Romanos Latinosque qui eius pugnae memoriam posteris tradiderunt, utrius partis T. Manlius dux fuisset, 9 eius futuram haud dubie fuisse victoriam. Latini ex fuga se Minturnas contulerunt. Castra secundum proelium capta, multique mortales ibi vivi oppressi,

¹ tamen Walters: ui tamen ui between points in H and following a point in P²T) Ω: ue tamen U.A⁴: ut tamen M:
 -que tandem Malvig.

¹ Whether Livy made use of Latin as well as Roman annalists is unknown; they no doubt existed, as he here gives us to understand.

the same, sent in their own triarii. These having fought fiercely for some time, and worn themselves out and broken or blunted their spears, yet were driving back the foe, and supposed that they had already won the field and penetrated the last line, when the consul cried out to the Roman triarii: “Rise up now, and with fresh strength confront the weary enemy, remembering your country and your parents, your wives and your children, remembering the consul who lies dead that you may conquer.” When the triarii had got to their feet, fresh and sound in their glittering armour, a new and unforeseen array, they received the antepilani into the gaps between their files, and, raising a shout, threw the enemy’s front ranks into disorder, and thrusting their spears into their faces, disposed of the fine flower of their manhood and went through the other maniples almost scatheless, as though their opponents had been unarmed, penetrating their masses with such slaughter as scarce to leave a fourth part of their enemies alive. The Samnites, too, drawn up a little way off at the base of the mountain, were a source of terror to the Latins.

For the rest, of all the citizens and allies, the chief glory of that war went to the consuls; of whom the one had drawn all the threats and menaces of the supernal and infernal gods upon himself alone, and the other had shown such valour and ability in the battle that it is readily agreed by both Romans and Latins who have handed down an account of this engagement that whichever side had been led by Titus Manlius would undoubtedly have been victorious.¹ The Latins fled to Minturnae. Their camp was captured after the battle and many men—

LIVY

A.U.C. 414 10 maxime Campani. Deci corpus ne eo die inveni-retur, nox quaerentes oppressit; postero die inventum inter maximam hostium stragem coopertum telis; funusque ei par morti celebrante collega factum est.

11 Illud adiciendum videtur, licere consuli dictatorique et praetori, cum legiones hostium devoveat, non utique se, sed quem velit ex legione Romana scripta 12 civem devovere; si is homo qui devotus est moritur, probe factum videri; ni moritur, tum signum septem pedes altum aut maius in terram defodi et pi-aculum¹ caedi; ubi illud signum defossum erit, eo 13 magistratum Romanum escendere fas non esse. Sin autem sese devovere volet, sicuti Decius devovit, ni moritur, neque suum neque publicum divinum pure faciet, sive hostia sive quo alio volet.² Qui sese devoverit, Volcano arma sive cui alii divo vovere 14 volet ius est; telo super quod stans consul precatus
est hostem potiri fas non est; si potiatur, Marti suovetaurilibus piaculum fieri. XI. Haec, etsi omnis divini humanique moris memoria abolevit nova pere-grinaque omnia prisca ac patriis praeferendo, haud ab re duxi verbis quoque ipsis, ut tradita nuncu-pataque sunt, referre.

2 Romanis post proelium demum factum Samnites

¹ piaculum Walters and Conway (in their note): piaculum hostia .am U) Ω.

² sive . . . volet placed here by Madvig: after diuo uouere volet Ω: omitted by HTDLA.

chiefly Campanians—were caught and slain there. B.C. 310
 The body of Decius could not be found that day, for night overtook the searchers; on the following day it was found, covered with missiles, in a great heap of enemies, and was given burial by his colleague in a manner befitting his death.

It seems proper to add here that the consul, dictator, or praetor who devotes the legions of the enemy need not devote himself, but may designate any citizen he likes from a regularly enlisted Roman legion; if the man who has been devoted dies, it is deemed that all is well; if he does not die, then an image of him is buried seven feet or more under ground and a sin-offering is slain; where the image has been buried, thither a Roman magistrate may not go up. But if he shall choose to devote himself, as Decius did, if he does not die, he cannot sacrifice either for himself or for the people without sin, whether with a victim or with any other offering he shall choose. He who devotes himself has the right to dedicate his arms to Vulcan, or to any other god he likes. The spear on which the consul has stood and prayed must not fall into the hands of an enemy; should this happen, expiation must be made to Mars with the sacrifice of a swine, a sheep, and an ox. XI. These particulars, even though the memory of every religious and secular usage has been wiped out by men's preference of the new and outlandish to the ancient and homebred, I have thought it not foreign to my purpose to repeat, and in the very words in which they were formulated and handed down.

I find in certain writers that it was not until the battle was over that the Samnites, who had been

venisse subsidio, exspectato eventu pugnae, apud 3 quosdam auctores invenio. Latinis quoque ab La-vinio auxilium, dum deliberando terunt tempus, 4 victis demum ferri coeptum; et, cum iam portis prima signa et pars agminis esset egressa, nuntio allato de clade Latinorum cum conversis signis retro in urbem rediretur, praetorem eorum nomine Mili-onium dixisse ferunt pro paulula via magnam mercedem esse Romanis solvendam.

5 Qui Latinorum pugnae superfuerant multis iti-neribus dissipati cum se in unum conglobassent, Vescia urbs eis receptaculum fuit. Ibi in conciliis
 6 Numisius imperator eorum adfirmabat¹ communem vere Martem belli utramque aciem pari caede pro-stravisse victoriaeque nomen tantum penes Romanos
 esse, ceteram pro victis fortunam et illos gerere;
 7 funesta duo consulum praetoria, alterum parricidio
 filii, alterum consulis devoti caede; trucidatum exercitum omnem, caesos hastatos principesque, stragem et ante signa et post signa factam, triarios
 8 postremo rem restituisse; Latinorum etsi pariter
 accisae copiae sint, tamen supplemento vel Latium 9 propius esse vel Volscos quam Romam; itaque, si videatur eis, se ex Latinis et ex Volscis populis iuventute propere excita, redditurum infesto exercitu
 Capuam esse Romanosque nihil tum minus quam

¹ adfirmabat Luterbacher: adfirmando Ω.

¹ Communis Mars belli, like c'est la guerre, was a phrase that was often on the lips of the unsuccessful, cf. v. xii. l.

waiting for the outcome of the engagement, came B.C. 340 up to support the Romans. The Latins, too, were already defeated when the Lavinians, who were consuming time in deliberation, began to march to their assistance ; and receiving word of the disaster to the Latins just as their foremost ensigns and a portion of their column had passed out through the gates, they faced about and returned into the city, their praetor, Milionius, remarking, so it is said, that they would have to pay a large price to the Romans for that little march.

Such of the Latins as survived the battle, after being dispersed over many roads, were reunited, and took refuge in the town of Vescia. In the councils which they held there, Numisius, their commander-in-chief, asserted that the fortune of war had in truth been common,¹ overwhelming both armies with equal carnage. The Romans, he said, were victorious only in name, in all else they too were as though they had been defeated ; both consular headquarters were polluted, the one by the blood of a son, the other by the death of the devoted consul ; their whole army had been cut to pieces, their first and second lines had been massacred, and the slaughter had extended from the troops before the standards to those behind them ; finally the veterans had restored the day ; but though the Latin forces had been equally cut up, yet, for recruiting, either Latium or the Volscian country was nearer than Rome ; if therefore it seemed good to them, he would speedily summon the fighting men from the Latin and Volscian tribes, and would return with an embattled host to Capua, where the unexpectedness of his arrival would strike dismay into the Romans,

A.U.C.
414

proelium exspectantes necopinato adventu percul-10 surum. Fallacibus litteris circa Latium nomenque Volscum missis, quia qui non interfuerant pugnae
 ad credendum temere faciliores erant, tumultuarius undique exercitus raptim conscriptus convenit.
 11 Huic agmini Torquatus consul ad Trifanum—
 inter Sinuessam Minturnasque is locus est—occurrit.
 Priusquam castris locus caperetur, sarcinis utrimque
 in acervum coniectis pugnatum debellatumque est; 12 adeo enim accisae res sunt ut consuli victorem exercitum ad depopulandos agros eorum ducenti dederent se omnes Latini ditionemque eam Cam-13 pani sequerentur. Latium Capuaque agro multati.
 Latinus ager Privernati addito agro et Falernus, qui populi Campani fuerat, usque ad Voltturnum 14 flumen plebi Romanae dividitur. Bina in Latino iugera, ita ut dodrante¹ ex Privernati completerent, data, terna in Falerno quadrantibus etiam pro lon-15 ginquitate adiectis. Extra poenam fuere Latinorum Laurentes Campanorumque equites, quia non desciv-erant. Cum Laurentibus renovari foedus iussum, renovaturque ex eo quotannis post diem decimum 16 Latinarum. Equitibus Campanis civitas Romana data,² monumentoque ut esset, aeneam tabulam in

¹ dodrante Linsmayer: dodrantem (drod- *DLA*³) Ω: quadrantem D⁴A.

² Romana data Drakenborch: rō data H: rodata TDLR: redata M: reddita A: redditā D³A²: data *PFUOT*².

¹ The iugera contained 28,800 square feet; the English acre contains 43,500.

who just then were looking for anything rather than a battle. Misleading letters were sent out to all parts of Latium and the country of the Volsci, and since those who received them had not been present at the battle, gained ready credence; and an army of militia was levied in hot haste and brought together from every quarter.

This force Torquatus the consul met near Trifanum, a place situated between Sinuessa and Minturnae. Both armies, without waiting to choose sites for their camps, piled their baggage and fell to fighting, and the war was ended then and there; for the enemy's strength was brought so low that, when the consul led his victorious army to pillage their fields, the Latins all surrendered, and the Campanians followed their example. Latium and Capua were deprived of territory. The Latin territory, with the addition of that belonging to Privernum, together with the Falernian—which had belonged to the Campanian people—as far as the river Voltumnus, was parcelled out amongst the Roman plebs. The assignment was two iugera in Latium supplemented with three-fourths of a iugerum from the land of Privernum, or three iugera in the Falernian district,—a fourth of a iugerum being added to compensate for its remoteness.¹ The Laurentes and the Campanian knights were exempted from the punishment inflicted on the Latins, because they had not revolted; it was ordered that the treaty with the Laurentes should be renewed, and it has been renewed every year from that time, on the tenth day after the Latin Festival. The Campanian knights received Roman citizenship, and to commemorate the occasion a bronze tablet was fastened up in

LIVY

A.U.C.
414A.U.C.
415

aede Castoris Romae fixerunt. Vectigal quoque eis Campanus populus iussus pendere in singulos quotannis—fuere autem mille et sexcenti—denarios nummos quadringenos quinquagenos. XII. Ita bello gesto, praemiis poenaque pro cuiusque merito persolutis, T. Manlius Romam rediit. Cui venienti seniores tantum obviam exisse constat, iuventutem et tunc et omni vita deinde aversatam eum exsecretamatque.

2 Antiates in agrum Ostiensem Ardeatem Solonium incursiones fecerunt. Manlius consul, quia ipse per valetudinem id bellum exsequi nequierat, dictatorem L. Papirium Crassum, qui tum forte erat praetor, dixit; ab eo magister equitum L. Papirius Cursor 3 dictus. Nihil memorabile adversus Antiates ab dictatore gestum est, cum aliquot menses stativa in agro Antiati habuisse.

4 Anno insigni victoria de tot ac tam potentibus populis, ad hoc consulum alterius nobili morte, alterius sicut truci ita claro ad memoriam imperio, successere consules Ti.¹ Aemilius Mamercinus Q.²

5 Publilius Philo, neque in similem materiam rerum, et ipsi aut suarum rerum aut partium in re publica magis quam patriae memores. Latinos ob iram agri amissi rebellantes in campis Fenectanis fuderunt 6 castrisque exuerunt. Ibi Publilio, eius ductu

¹ Ti. — Sigonius (Diod. xvi. xci. 1); titius (or ticius) Ω:
^t U Cassiod. (C.I.L. i², p. 44, A.U.C. 425).

² Q. — (Diod., l.c.) omitted by Ω.

¹ Castor and Pollux were protectors of the Roman knights and hence appropriately chosen as patrons of the friendly relations established with the aristocracy of Capua.

² The denarius was a silver coin weighing 70 grains Troy and reckoned as equivalent to 16 asses. But silver was not coined in Rome until 268 B.C.

the temple of Castor at Rome.¹ Moreover, the B.C. 340 Campanian people were commanded to pay them each a yearly stipend—there were sixteen hundred of them—amounting to four hundred and fifty denarii.² XII. The war being thus dispatched, and rewards and penalties distributed in accordance with everyone's deserts, Titus Manlius returned to Rome; B.C. 339 it is said that on his approach only the seniors went out to meet him, and that the young men, then and for all the remainder of his days, abhorred and execrated him.

The Antiates committed depredations upon the lands of Ostia, Ardea, and Solonium. Manlius, the consul, having been unable himself to conduct this war because of ill-health, appointed as dictator Lucius Papirius Crassus, who at that time happened to be praetor, and he in turn named Lucius Papirius Cursor master of the horse. The dictator accomplished nothing noteworthy against the Antiates, though he lay some months encamped in their territory.

To a year that was famous for its victory over so many and so powerful nations, and also for the glorious death of one of the consuls and the other's severity of discipline, which though cruel was nevertheless renowned through the ages, succeeded the consulship of Tiberius Aemilius Mamercinus and Quintus Publilius Philo. These men had no such opportunities, and were, besides, more concerned for their own or their party's interests than for the country. The Latins took up arms again, being incensed at the confiscation of their land, and suffered a defeat and the loss of their camp, in the Fenectane Plains.³ While Publilius, under whose command and

¹ Named presumably from some unknown town in Latium.

LIVY

A.U.C.
415

auspicioque res gestae erant, in deditioinem accipiente Latinos populos, quorum ibi iuventus caesa 7 erat, Aemilius ad Pedum exercitus duxit. Pedanos tuebatur Tiburs Praenestinus Veltinusque populus;
 8 venerant et ab Lanuvio Antioque auxilia. Ubi cum proeliis quidem superior Romanus esset, ad urbem ipsam Pedum castraque sociorum populorum, quae urbi adiuncta erant, integer labor restaret, bello 9 infecto repente omisso consul, quia collegae decre-
 tum triumphum audivit, ipse quoque triumphi ante
 10 victoriam flagitator Romam rediit. Qua cupiditate offensis patribus negantibusque nisi Pedo capto aut dedito triumphum, hinc alienatus ab senatu Aemilius seditionis tribunatibus similem deinde consulatum
 11 gessit. Nam neque, quoad fuit consul, criminari apud populum patres destitit collega haudquaquam
 12 adversante, quia et ipse de plebe erat—materiam autem praebebat criminibus ager in Latino Falernoque¹ maligne plebei divisus—et postquam senatus finire imperium consulibus cupiens dictatorem ad-
 13 versus rebellantes Latinos dici iussit, Aemilius, cuius tum² fasces erant, collegam dictatorem dixit; ab eo
 14 magister equitum Iunius Brutus dictus. Dictatura popularis et orationibus in patres criminosis fuit, et quod tres leges secundissimas plebei, adversas
 15 nobilitati tulit: unam, ut plebiscita omnes Quirites

¹ Falernoque Tan. Faber: Falernoque agro Ω.

² cuius tum A²ς: tum cuius Ω: tunc cuius F: cuius Walters and Conway.

¹ In the city the consuls took turns in exercising supreme administrative authority, and the twelve lictors, with the rods ('fasces'), attended the consul who, for the time being, enjoyed this authority.

B.C. 339

auspices the campaign had been conducted, was receiving the surrender of the Latin peoples whose soldiers had fallen there, Aemilius led his army against Pedum. The Pedani were supported by the people of Tibur, Praeneste, and Velitrae, and auxiliaries had also come from Lanuvium and Antium. Though the Romans proved superior in certain engagements, yet the town of Pedum and the camp of the allied nations, which adjoined it, still remained intact to be dealt with, when suddenly the consul, hearing that his colleague had been decreed a triumph, left the war unfinished and returned to Rome to demand a triumph for himself as well, without staying to obtain a victory. This self-seeking disgusted the Fathers, who denied him a triumph, unless he should capture Pedum or receive its surrender. Estranged from the senate by this rebuff, Aemilius thereafter administered his consulship in the spirit of a seditious tribune. For, all the time that he was consul, he ceased not to accuse the senators to the people, while his colleague, since he too was of the plebs, offered not the smallest opposition. The ground of his accusations was the niggardly apportionment of land to the plebeians in the Latin and Falernian districts. And when the senate, desiring to put an end to the authority of the consuls, ordered that a dictator should be appointed to oppose the rebellious Latins, Aemilius, who then had the rods,¹ named his colleague dictator, by whom Junius Brutus was designated master of the horse. Publilius was a popular dictator, both because of his denunciation of the senate and because he carried through three laws very advantageous to the plebs and prejudicial to the nobles: one, that the decisions of the plebs

LIVY

A.U.C.
415

tenerent; alteram, ut legum, quae comitiis centuriatis ferrentur, ante initum suffragium patres 16 auctores fierent; tertiam, ut alter utique ex plebe —cum eo ventum sit ut utrumque plebeium fieri 17 liceret—censor crearetur. Plus eo anno domi acceptum cladis ab consulibus ac dictatore quam ex victoria eorum bellicisque rebus foris auctum imperium patres credebant.

A.U.C.
416

XIII. Anno insequenti, L. Furio Camillo C. Maenio consulibus, quo insignitus omissa res Aemilio, superioris anni consuli, exprobraretur, Pedum armis virisque et omni vi expugnandum ac delendum senatus fremit; coactique novi consules 2 omnibus eam rem praeverti proficiscuntur. Iam Latio¹ is status erat rerum ut neque bellum neque pacem pati possent. Ad bellum opes deerant; pacem 3 ob agri adempti dolorem aspernabantur. Mediis consiliis standum videbatur—ut oppidis se tenerent, ne lacessitus Romanus causam belli haberet—et si cuius oppidi obsidio nuntiata esset, undique ex 4 omnibus populis auxilium obsensis ferretur. Neque tamen nisi admodum a paucis populis Pedani adiuti sunt. Tiburtes Praenestinique, quorum ager pro- 5 pior erat, Pedum pervenere: Aricinos Lanuvinosque et Veltornos Antiatibus Volscis se coniungentes ad Asturae² flumen Maenius improviso adortus fudit.

¹ Latio Ω: in Latio Madrig (but cf. Walters and Conway ad loc.).

² Asturae Sabellicus (Plin. N.H. III. v. 9, § 57) Σ: Satura (or -e) Ω: saturem D.L.A.

¹ See chap. xi. § 13.

² A little river emptying into the Mediterranean south of Antium.

should be binding on all the Quirites ; another, that the Fathers should ratify the measures proposed at the centuriate comitia before they were voted on ; and a third, that at least one censor should be chosen from the plebs—since they had gone so far as to make it lawful for both to be plebeians. The harm that was wrought at home in that year by the consuls and the dictator outweighed—in the belief of the patricians—the increase in empire that resulted from their victory and their management of the war.

XIII. In the following year, when Lucius Furius Camillus and Gaius Maenius were consuls, the senators, in order to render more conspicuous the negligence of Aemilius in the year before, insisted angrily that men and arms and every kind of force must be employed to capture Pedum and destroy it ; and the new consuls were forced to put aside all other matters and set out for that place. The Latins were now come to such a pass that they could endure neither war nor peace ; for war they lacked the means, and they scorned peace, for they still smarted under the confiscation of their land.¹ It seemed necessary to adopt a compromise, and keep to their towns—lest they might provoke the Romans and afford them a pretext for hostilities—and if tidings were brought that any town was beleaguered, to send in help to the besieged from all the surrounding peoples. For all that, the cities that aided Pedum were very few. The Tiburtes and Praenestini, whose territories lay near by, reached Pedum ; the Aricini, Lanuvini, and Veliterni, as they were effecting a juncture with the Antiate Volsei at the river Astura,² were suddenly attacked by Maenius and routed. Camillus dealt

LIVY

u.c. 6 Camillus ad Pedum cum Tiburtibus, maxime valido 416 exercitu, maiore mole quamquam aequo prospero
 7 eventu pugnat. Tumultum maxime repentina inter proelium eruptio oppidanorum fecit; in quos parte exercitus conversa Camillus non compulit solum eos intra moenia, sed eodem etiam die, eum ipsos auxilia-8 que eorum pereculisset, oppidum scalis cepit. Placuit inde iam maiore conatu animoque ab unius expug-natione urbis ad perdomandum Latium victorem circumducere exercitum. Nec quievere antequam expugnando aut in ditionem accipiendo singulas 9 urbes Latium omne subegere. Praesidiis inde dis-positis per recepta oppida Romam ad destinatum omnium consensu triumphum decessere. Additus triumpho honos, ut statuae equestres eis—rara illa aetate res—in foro ponerentur.
 10 Priusquam comitiis in insequentem annum consules rogarent, Camillus de Latinis populis ad sena-11 tum rettulit atque ita disseruit: “Patres conscripti, quod bello armisque in Latio agendum fuit, id iam
 deum benignitate ae virtute militum ad finem venit.
 12 Caesi ad Pedum Asturamque sunt exercitus hostium;
 oppida Latina omnia et Antium ex Volscis aut vi
 capta aut recepta in ditionem praesidiis tenentur 13 vestris. Reliqua consultatio est, quoniam rebellando saepius nos sollicitant, quoniam modo perpetua pace

¹ Livy means to include with them the Praenestini.

with the very powerful army of the Tiburtes¹ in the B.C. 333 vicinity of Pedum: the struggle was harder, but the issue was equally successful. The greatest confusion was occasioned by a sudden sally of the townsfolk during the battle; but Camillus, sending a part of his army against them, not only drove them back into their city, but having discomfited both them and their allies, even took the place by escalade that very day. The consuls then resolved, with the added energy and courage that came with the capture of one city, to proceed with their victorious army to the thorough conquest of the Latins; nor did they rest until, by storming every city or receiving its surrender, they had brought all Latium under their dominion. Then, distributing garrisons amongst the recovered towns, they departed for Rome, to enjoy the triumph by general consent awarded them. In addition to the triumph, they were granted the honour—a rare one in those days—of equestrian statues put up in the Forum.

Before the consular elections for the following year were held, Camillus referred to the senate the disposition of the Latin peoples, and spoke as follows: “Conscript Fathers, what was needful to be done in Latium in the way of war and arms has now by Heaven’s favour and the valour of our troops been brought to a conclusion. The armies of our enemies have been cut to pieces at Pedum and on the Astura: all the Latin towns, and Antium in the land of the Volsei, have either been carried by storm or have made submission, and are in the keeping of your garrisons. It remains to consider, since they so often occasion us anxiety by a renewal of hostilities, how we may hold them

LIVY

.u.c. 14 quietos obtineamus. Di immortales ita vos potentes 416 huius consilii fecerunt ut, sit Latium deinde an non sit, in vestra manu posuerint; itaque pacem vobis,
 quod ad Latinos attinet, parare in perpetuum vel 15 saeviendo vel ignoscendo potestis. Voltis crudeliter consulere in deditos victosque? Licet delere omne Latium, vastas inde solitudines facere, unde sociali
 egregio exercitu per multa bella magnaue saepe usi 16 estis. Voltis exemplo maiorum augere rem Romanam victos in civitatem accipiendo? Materia crescendi per summam gloriam suppeditat. Certe id firmissi-mum longe imperium est quo oboedientes gaudent.
 17 Sed maturato opus est quidquid statuere placet; tot
 populos inter spem metumque suspensos animi habetis; et vestram itaque de eis curam quam primum absolvi, et illorum animos, dum exspectatione stupent, seu poena seu beneficio praeoccupari 18 oportet. Nostrum fuit efficere ut omnium rerum vobis ad consulendum potestas esset; vestrum est decernere quod optimum vobis reique publicae sit."

XIV. Principes senatus relationem consulis de summa rerum laudare, sed, cum aliorum causa alia
 esset, ita expediri posse consilium dicere, si,¹ ut pro
 merito cuiusque statueretur, de singulis nominatim

¹ si placed here by Walters and Conway: in Δ it stands
 before de singulis, but is omitted by PFUT² (or T³).

quietly to a lasting peace. The immortal gods have given you such absolute control of the situation as to leave the decision in your hands whether Latium is henceforward to exist or not. You are therefore able to assure yourselves of a permanent peace, in so far as the Latins are concerned, by the exercise of either cruelty or forgiveness, at your discretion. Would you adopt stern measures against those who have surrendered or been vanquished? You may blot out all Latium, and make vast solitudes of those places where you have often raised a splendid army of allies and used it through many a momentous war. Would you follow the example of your fathers, and augment the Roman state by receiving your conquered enemies as citizens? You have at hand the means of waxing great and supremely glorious. That government is certainly by far the strongest to which its subjects yield obedience gladly. But whatever it pleases you to do, you must determine promptly; you are holding so many peoples in suspense betwixt hope and fear, that it behoves you both to resolve your own anxiety regarding them as soon as may be, and to be beforehand with them, whether in the way of punishment or kindness, while they are waiting in a dull amazement. Our task has been to give you the power to decide regarding everything; it is yours to determine what is best for yourselves and for the state."

XIV. The leading senators praised the motion of Camillus on the national policy, but said that, since the Latins were not all in like case, his advice could best be carried out if the consuls would introduce proposals concerning the several peoples by name,

A.U.C.
416

2 referrent populis. Relatum igitur de singulis decretumque. Lanuvinis civitas data sacraque sua red-dita, cum eo ut aedes lucusque Sospitae Iunonis
 communis Lanuvinis municipibus cum populo
 3 Romano esset. Aricini Nomentanique et Pedani eodem iure quo Lanuvini in civitatem accepti.
 4 Tusculanis servata civitas quam habebant, crimenque rebellionis a publica fraude in paucos auctores ver-5 sum. In Veliternos, veteres cives Romanos, quod totiens rebellassent, graviter saevitum: et muri
 deiecti et senatus inde abductus iussique trans Tibi-6 rim habitare, ut eius qui eis Tiberim deprehensus esset usque ad mille pondo assium¹ clarigatio esset nec priusquam aere persoluto is qui cepisset extra 7 vincula captum haberet. In agrum senatorum coloni missi, quibus adscriptis speciem antiquae 8 frequentiae Velitrae receperunt. Et Antium nova colonia missa, cum eo ut Antiatis permitteretur, si et ipsi adscribi coloni vellent; naves inde longae abactae interdictumque mari Antiati populo est et 9 civitas data. Tiburtes Praenestinique agro multati, neque ob recens tantum rebellionis commune cum aliis Latinis crimen, sed quod taedio imperii Romani cum Gallis, gente efferata, arma quondam con-

¹ pondo assium Lachmann (who wrote assum): pondo ζ : passum Ω : passuum $U\zeta$: passus F^4 (or F^3) HA^3 : assium Madvig (with hesitation).

¹ Presumably cum suffragio—with full political rights.

² Where they would be interned amongst an alien population.

as each should seem to merit. They were therefore taken up and disposed of separately. The Lanuvini were given citizenship,¹ and their worship was restored to them, with the stipulation that the temple and grove of Juno Sospita should be held in common by the burghers of Lanuvium and the Roman People. The Aricini, Nomentani, and Pedani were received into citizenship on the same terms as the Lanuvini. The Tusculans were allowed to retain the civic rights which they enjoyed, and the charge of renewing the war was laid to a few ringleaders, without endamaging the community. The Veliterni, Roman citizens of old, were severely punished, because they had so often revolted: not only were their walls thrown down, but their senate was carried off and commanded to dwell across the Tiber,² with this understanding: that if any should be caught on the hither side, his redemption should be set at a thousand pounds of bronze, and that he who had captured him might not release his prisoner from bondage until the fine was paid. Colonists were settled on the senators' lands, and on their enrolment Velitrae regained its former appearance of populousness. To Antium likewise a colony was dispatched, with an understanding that the Antiates might be permitted, if they liked, themselves to enroll as colonists; their war-ships were taken from them and their people were forbidden the sea; they were granted citizenship. The Tiburtes and Praenestini were deprived of territory, not only because of the fresh charge of rebellion brought against them in common with the other Latins, but because they had once, in disgust at the power of Rome, united in arms with the

A.U.C. 416 10 sociassent. Ceteris Latinis populis conubia commerciaque et concilia inter se ademerunt. Campanis equitum honoris causa, quia cum Latinis rebellare noluisserunt, Fundanisque et Formianis, quod per fines eorum tuta pacataque semper fuisset via, civitas 11 sine suffragio data. Cumanos Suessulanosque eiusdem iuris condicionisque cuius Capuam esse placuit.

A.U.C. 417 12 Naves Antiatium partim in navalia Romae subductae, partim incensae, rostrisque earum suggestum in foro exstructum adornari placuit, Rostraque id templum appellatum.

XV. C. Sulpicio Longo P. Aelio Paeto consulibus cum omnia non opes magis Romanae quam beneficiis parta gratia bona pace obtineret, inter Sidicinos 2 Auruncosque bellum ortum. Aurunci, T. Manlio consule in ditionem accepti, nihil deinde moverant; eo petendi auxilii ab Romanis causa iustior 3 fuit. Sed priusquam consules ab urbe—iusserat enim senatus defendi Auruncos—exercitum educe- 4 rent, fama adfertur Auruncos metu oppidum dese- ruisse profugosque cum coniugibus ac liberis Suessam communisse,¹ quae nunc Aurunca appellatur,² moenia antiqua eorum urbemque ab Sidicinis

¹ communisse Ω: commeasse U.

² appellatur Σ (Madvig): appellata Ω.

¹ The Tiburtes had fought on the Gallic side in 361 and 360 B.C. (vii. xi. 1), the Praenestini possibly in 358 (vii. xii. 8).

² The speaker's platform on the line between the Comitium and the Forum is referred to earlier (iv. xvii. 6), but possibly only the place is there meant. Certainly Livy seems to imply here that the platform was now erected for the first time.

³ 340 B.C.

⁴ Suessa Aurunca was so called in order to distinguish it from the Volscian town Suessa Pomptina.

Gauls, a race of savages.¹ The rest of the Latin peoples were deprived of the rights of mutual trade and intermarriage and of holding common councils. The Campanians, out of compliment to their knights, because they had not consented to revolt along with the Latins, were granted citizenship without the suffrage; so too were the Fundani and Formiani, because they had always afforded a safe and peaceful passage through their territories. It was voted to give the people of Cumae and Suessula the same rights and the same terms as the Capuans. The ships of the Antiates were some of them laid up in the Roman dockyards, and some were burnt and a motion passed to employ their beaks for the adornment of a platform erected in the Forum. This place was dedicated with augural ceremonies and given the name of Rostra or The Beaks.²

XV. In the consulship of Gaius Sulpicius Longus and Publius Aelius Paetus the good-will which their generous conduct had procured for the Romans had been no less efficacious than their power in maintaining a general peace, when a war broke out between the Sidicini and the Aurunci. The Aurunci had surrendered in the consulship of Titus Manlius³ and had given no trouble since that time, for which reason they had the better right to expect assistance from the Romans. But before the consuls marched from Rome—for the Senate had directed them to defend the Aurunci—tidings were brought that the Aurunci had abandoned their town, in their alarm, and had taken refuge, with their wives and children, in Suessa—now called Aurunca⁴—which they had fortified: and that their ancient walls and their city had been destroyed by the Sidicini. This news

- A.U.C.
417 5 deletam. Ob ea infensus consulibus senatus, quorum eunctione proditi socii essent, dictatorem dici iussit. Dictus C. Claudius Inregillensis magistrum 6 equitum C. Claudio Hortatorem dixit. Religio inde iniecta de dictatore, et cum augures vitio creaturn videri dixissent, dictator magisterque equi-tum se magistratu abdicarunt.
- 7 Eo anno Minucia Vestalis suspecta primo propter
mundiorem iusto cultum, insimulata deinde apud 8 pontifices ab indice servo, cum decreto eorum iussaessel sacris abstinere familiamque in potestate
habere, facto iudicio viva sub terram ad portam Collinam dextra viam¹ stratam defossa Scelerato campo; credo ab incesto id ei loco nomen factum.
- 9 Eodem anno Q. Publilius² Philo praetor primum de plebe adversante Sulpicio consule, qui negabat rationem eius se habiturum, est factus, senatu, cum in summis imperiis id non obtinuisse, minus in praetura tendente.

A.U.C.
18-420

XVI. Insequens annus, L. Papirio Crasso K.
Duillio consulibus, Ausonum magis novo quam
2 magno bello fuit insignis. Ea gens Cales urbem incolebat; Sidicinis finitimis arma coniunxerat, unoque proelio haud sane memorabili duorum populorum

¹ dextra viam Ω: dextra uiae M⁴: dextra uia A^x (over erasure); extra uiam U (Maulrig): iuxta viam Weissenborn.

² Publilius Glareanus and Sigonius at chap. xii. § 5): publius Ω.

¹ Had she manumitted them it would have been illegal to examine them under torture.

² The consul did not act upon his threat, so Livy implies, upon finding the senators lukewarm in their support.

B.C. 337

made the senate angry with the consuls, by whose tardiness the allies had been betrayed, and they ordered a dictator to be appointed. The nomination fell to Gaius Claudius Inregillensis, who named as his master of horse Gaius Claudius Hortator. A religious difficulty was then raised about the dictator, and on the augurs' reporting that there seemed to have been a flaw in his appointment, the dictator and his master of the horse resigned.

In that year the Vestal Minucia, suspected in the first instance because of her dress, which was more ornate than became her station, was subsequently accused before the pontiffs on the testimony of a slave, and having been by their decree commanded to keep aloof from the sacred rites and to retain her slaves in her own power,¹ was convicted and buried alive near the Colline Gate, to the right of the paved road in the Polluted Field—so called, I believe, on account of her unchastity.

In the same year Quintus Publilius Philo was made praetor,—the first to be chosen from the plebs. Sulpicius the Consul opposed his election and declared that he would receive no votes for him; but the senate, having failed in its opposition to plebeian candidates for the highest magistracies, was less obstinate in the matter of the praetorship.²

XVI. The following year, being the consulship of Lucius Papirius Crassus and Caeso Duillius, was remarkable for a war more novel than important, to wit with the Ausonians, who inhabited the city of Cales. They had joined forces with their neighbours, the Sidicini, and the army of the two peoples having suffered a defeat in one—by no means memorable—

B.C.
336-334

LIVY

A.U.C.
418-420

exercitus fusus propinquitate urbium et ad fugam
 3 pronior et in fuga ipsa tutior fuit. Nec tamen omissa eius belli cura patribus, quia totiens iam
 Sidicini aut ipsi moverant bellum aut moventibus
 4 auxilium tulerant aut causa armorum fuerant. Ita-que omni ope adnisi sunt, ut maximum ea tempe-state imperatorem M. Valerium Corvum¹ consulem
 5 quartum facerent; collega additus Corvo M. Atilius Regulus; et ne forte casu erraretur, petitum ab
 consulibus ut extra sortem Corvi ea provincia esset.
 6 Exercitu victore a superioribus consulibus accepto, ad Cales, unde bellum ortum erat, profectus, cum hostes ab superioris etiam certaminis memoria pavi-dos clamore atque impetu primo fudisset, moenia 7 ipsa oppugnare est adgressus. Et militum quidem is erat ardor ut iam inde cum scalis succedere ad 8 muros vellent evasurosque contenderent; Corvus, quia id arduum factu erat, labore militum potius quam periculo peragere inceptum voluit. Itaque aggerem et vineas egit turresque muro admovit, quarum usum forte oblata opportunitas praevertit.
 9 Namque M. Fabius, captivus Romanus, cum per neglegentiam custodum festo die vinculis ruptis per murum inter opera Romanorum, religata ad pinnam 10 muri reste suspensus, manibus se demisisset, perpulit imperatorem ut vino epulisque sopitos hostes adgre-

¹ Corvum Ω: coruinum (and coruino in § 5, where, however, O has corino) UO.

battle, was by the nearness of their cities not only the more disposed to flight, but found in that same flight the readier safety. The senators, however, did not cease to be concerned over this war, so many times before had the Sidicini either drawn the sword themselves, or lent aid to those who were drawing it, or been the occasion of hostilities. They accordingly bent every effort to elect to his fourth consulship the greatest soldier of that age, Marcus Valerius Corvus. To be his colleague, they gave him Marcus Atilius Regulus; and lest there should by chance be some miscarriage, they requested of the consuls that Corvus be given the command, without the drawing of lots. Taking over the victorious army from the previous consuls, he marched on Cales, where the war had originated, and routing the enemy—who had as yet not even recovered from the panic of the earlier encounter—at the first cheer and onset, he attacked the town itself. The soldiers, for their part, were so eager that they wished to attempt the walls at once with scaling-ladders, and insisted that they could carry the place; but Corvus, since this would have been an arduous achievement, preferred to accomplish his purpose at the cost of labour rather than of danger to his men. He therefore constructed a terrace and brought up mantlets, and moved his towers close to the walls, but a fortunate circumstance made it unnecessary to employ them. For Marcus Fabius, a Roman prisoner, being neglected by his guards on a day of merry-making, broke his bonds, let himself down by the wall, hand over hand, into the Roman works, by a rope which he had made fast to a battlement, and induced the general to attack the enemy while they deretur; nec maiore certamine capti cum urbe Ausones sunt quam acie fusi erant. Praeda capta ingens est, praesidioque imposito Calibus reductae 11 Romam legiones. Consul ex senatus consulto triumphavit, et, ne Atilius expers gloriae esset, iussi ambo consules adversus Sidicinos ducere exercitum. Dictatoremi ante ex senatus consulto comitiorum habendorum causa dixerunt L. Aemilium Mamercinum; is magistrum equitum Q. Publilium Philonem dixit. Dictatore comitia habente consules 12 creati sunt T. Veturius Sp. Postumius. Ei, etsi¹ belli pars cum Sidicinis restabat, tamen, ut beneficio praevenirent desiderium plebis, de colonia deducenda Cales rettulerunt; factoque senatus consulto ut duo milia quingenti homines eo scriberentur, tres viros coloniae deducendae agroque dividundo creaverunt K. Duillium T. Quinetium M. Fabium.

A.U.C.
420

A.U.C.
422

XVII. Novi deinde consules a veteribus exercitu accepto ingressi hostium fines populando usque ad
 2 moenia atque urbem pervenerunt. Ibi quia ingenti exercitu comparato Sidicini et ipsi pro extrema spe dimicaturi enixe videbantur et Samnium fama erat
 3 conciri ad bellum, dictator ab consulibus ex auctoritate senatus dictus P. Cornelius Rufinus, magister

¹ Ei, etsi Madrig: etsi Ω.

¹ This was the third triumph of Corvus. See VII. xxvii. 8, and xxxviii. 3.

B.C.
336-334

were overcome with feasting and drinking. The result was that the Ausonians and their city were captured with no greater effort than they had been defeated in the field. Huge spoils were taken, a garrison was established in the town, and the legions were led back to Rome. The consul triumphed,¹ in pursuance of a senatorial decree, and lest Atilius should go without his meed of glory, both consuls were directed to march against the Sidicini. But first—being so instructed by the senate—they named a dictator to preside at the elections, their choice falling on Lucius Aemilius Mamercinus, who selected Quintus Publilius Philo to be master of the horse. Under the presidency of the dictator, Titus Veturius and Spurius Postumius were chosen consuls. These men, although a half of the war—with the Sidicini—yet remained, nevertheless, in order to anticipate the desires of the plebs by doing them a service, brought in a proposal for sending out a colony to Cales. The senate resolved that twenty-five hundred men should be enrolled for it, and appointed Caeso Duillius, Titus Quinctius, and Marcus Fabius a commission of three to conduct the settlers to the land and apportion it amongst them.

XVIII. The new consuls then took over the army from their predecessors, and entering the enemy's territory laid it waste as far as their city walls. At this juncture, since the Sidicini had themselves raised an enormous army and seemed likely to make a desperate struggle in behalf of their last hope, and since the rumour went that Samnium was arming, the senate authorized the consuls to nominate a dictator. They appointed Publius Cornelius Rufinus, and Marcus Antonius was made master of the horse.

B.C. 332

- 4 equitum M. Antonius. Religio deinde incessit vitio
 eos creatos, magistratuque se abdicaverunt; et quia pestilentia insecura est, velut omnibus eo vitio contactis auspiciis, res ad interregnum rediit.
- 5 Ab interregno inito per quintum demum interregem, M. Valerium Corvum,¹ creati consules A.
- 6 Cornelius iterum et Cn. Domitius. Tranquillis rebus
 fama Gallici belli pro tumultu valuit ut dictatorem dici placeret. Dictus M. Papirius Crassus et magis-
- 7 ter equitum P. Valerius Publicola. A quibus cum dilectus intentius quam adversus finitima bella haberetur, exploratores missi attulerunt quieta
- 8 omnia apud Gallos esse. Samnum quoque iam
 alterum annum turbari novis consiliis suspectum erat; eo ex agro Sidicino exercitus Romanus non
- 9 deductus. Ceterum Samnites bellum Alexandri Epirensis in Lucanos traxit; qui duo populi adversus
- 10 regem escensionem² a Paesto facientem signis con-latis pugnaverunt. Eo certamine superior Alexander, incertum qua fide culturus, si perinde cetera pro-cessissent, pacem cum Romanis fecit.
- 11 Eodem anno census actus novique cives censi.
 Tribus propter eos additae Maecia et Scaptia; censores
- 12 addiderunt Q. Publilius Philo Sp. Postumius. Romani

¹ Corvum Ω: coruinum UO.

² escensionem, Σ: escensione Ω: excensionem ΑΣ: excursionem I³A³: ascensionem U.

¹ The Maecian tribe was presumably named from Castrum Maecium (near Lanuvium) mentioned at vi. ii. 8, and the Scaptian from the town of Scaptia which lay between Tibur and Tusculum. The number of tribes was thus raised to twenty-nine.

Ascruple was subsequently raised about the regularity of their appointment, and they resigned their office ; and when a pestilence ensued, it was supposed that all the auspices were affected by that irregularity, and the state reverted to an interregnum.

Finally Marcus Valerius Corvus, the fifth interrex from the beginning of the interregnum, achieved the election to the consulship of Aulus Cornelius (for the second time) and Gnaeus Domitius. Coming, as it did, when all was tranquil, the rumour of a Gallic war worked like an actual rising, and caused the senate to have recourse to a dictator. Marcus Papirius Crassus was the man, and he named Publius Valerius Publicola master of the horse. While they were conducting their levy, more strenuously than they would have done for a war against a neighbouring state, scouts were sent out, and returned with the report that all was quiet amongst the Gauls. Samnium likewise had now for two years been suspected of hatching revolutionary schemes, for which reason the Roman army was not withdrawn from the Sidicine country. But an invasion by Alexander of Epirus drew the Samnites off into Lucania, and these two peoples engaged in a pitched battle with the King, as he was marching up from Paestum. The victory remained with Alexander, who then made a treaty of peace with the Romans ; with what faith he intended to keep it, had the rest of his campaign been equally successful, is a question.

In this same year the census was taken and new citizens were assessed. On their account the Maecian and Scaptian tribes were added.¹ The censors who added them were Quintus Publilius Philo and facti Acerrani lege ab L. Papirio praetore lata, qua civitas sine suffragio data. Haec eo anno domi militiaeque gesta.

LIVY

XVIII. Foedus insequens annus seu intemperie caeli seu humana fraude fuit, M. Claudio Marcello 2 C.¹ Valerio consulibus. Flaceum Potitumque varie in annalibus cognomen consulis invenio; ceterum in eo parvi refert quid veri sit; illud per velim—nec omnes auctores sunt—proditum falso esse, venenis absumptos quorum mors infamem annum pestilentia 3 fecerit; sicut proditur tamen res, ne cui auctorum 4 fidem abrogaverim, exponenda est. Cum primores civitatis similibus morbis eodemque ferme omnes eventu morerentur, ancilla quaedam ad Q. Fabium Maximum aedilem curulem indicaturam se causam publicae pestis professa est, si ab eo fides sibi data 5 esset haud futurum noxae indicium. Fabius confessim rem ad consules, consules ad senatum referunt, 6 consensuque ordinis fides indicie data. Tum patefactum muliebri fraude civitatem premi matronasque ea venena coquere, et si sequi extemplo velint, 7 manifesto deprehendi posse. Secuti indicem et coquentes quasdam medicamenta et recondita alia

¹ C. Siganius (Diod. xvii. lxxiv. 1): t. 2.

Spurius Postumius. The people of Acerra became B.C. 332 Romans under a statute, proposed by the praetor Lucius Papirius, which granted them citizenship without the suffrage. Such were the events of this year at home and in the field.

XVIII. A terrible year succeeded, whether owing B.C. 331 to the unseasonable weather or to man's depravity. The consuls were Marcus Claudius Marcellus and Gaius Valerius. I find Flaccus and Potitus severally given in the annals, as the surname of Valerius; but it does not greatly signify where the truth lies in regard to this. One thing, however, I should be glad to believe had been falsely handed down—and indeed not all the authorities avouch it—namely, that those whose deaths made the year notorious for pestilence were in reality destroyed by poison: still, I must set forth the story as it comes to us, that I may not deprive any writer of his credit. When the leading citizens were falling ill with the same kind of malady, which had, in almost every case the same fatal termination, a certain serving-woman came to Quintus Fabius Maximus, the curule aedile, and declared that she would reveal the cause of the general calamity, if he would give her a pledge that she should not suffer for her testimony. Fabius at once referred the matter to the consuls, and the consuls to the senate, and a pledge was given to the witness with the unanimous approval of that body. She then disclosed the fact that the City was afflicted by the criminal practices of the women; that they who prepared these poisons were matrons, whom, if they would instantly attend her, they might take in the very act. They followed the informer and found certain women brewing poisons,

.v.c.
423

8 invenerunt. Quibus in forum delatis et ad viginti matronis, apud quas deprehensa erant, per viatorem accitis, duae ex eis, Cornelia ac Sergia, patriciae utraque gentis, cum ea medicamenta salubria esse contenderent, ab confutante indice bibere iussae, ut se falsum commentam in conspectu omnium¹ arguerent, spatio ad conloquendum sumpto, cum submoto populo rem ad ceteras rettulissent, haud abnuentibus et illis bibere, epoto medicamento suamet ipsae 9 fraude omnes interierunt. Comprehensae extemplo earum comites magnum numerum matronarum indicaverunt; ex quibus ad centum septuaginta 10 damnatae. Neque de beneficiis ante eam diem Romae quaesitum est. Prodigii ea res loco habita captisque magis mentibus quam conseclaratis similis 11 visa; itaque memoria ex annalibus repetita in secessionibus quondam plebis clavum ab dictatore fixum alienatasque discordia mentes hominum eo piaculo compotes sui fuisse,² dictatorem clavi figendi causa 12 creari placuit. Creatus Cn. Quintilius magistrum equitum L. Valerium dixit, qui fixo clavo magistratus abdicaverunt.

.v.c.
424

XIX. Creati consules L. Papirius Crassus iterum L. Plautius Venox; cuius principio anni legati ex Volscis Fabraterni et Lucani Romam venerunt, orantes ut in and other poisons stored away. These concoctions B.C. 331 were brought into the Forum, and some twenty matrons, in whose houses they had been discovered, were summoned thither by an apparitor. Two of their number, Cornelia and Sergia, of patrician houses both, asserted that these drugs were salutary. On the informer giving them the lie, and bidding them drink and prove her charges false in the sight of all, they took time to confer, and after the crowd had been dismissed they referred the question to the rest, and finding that they, like themselves, would not refuse the draught, they all drank off the poison and perished by their own wicked practices. Their attendants being instantly arrested informed against a large number of matrons, of whom one hundred and seventy were found guilty; yet until that day there had never been a trial for poisoning in Rome. Their act was regarded as a prodigy, and suggested madness rather than felonious intent. Accordingly when a tradition was revived from the annals how formerly in secessions of the plebs¹ a nail had been driven by the dictator, and how men's minds, which had been distracted by dissension, had by virtue of that expiation regained their self-control, they resolved on the appointment of a dictator to drive the nail. The appointment went to Gnaeus Quintilius, who named Lucius Valerius master of the horse. The nail was driven and they resigned their posts.

¹ The words in conspectu omnium are found in the MSS. after populo. Walters and Conway suggest placing them here, or preferably, after epoto; but in the latter position they would be inconsistent with submoto populo, for the women would not recall the crowd to witness their own discomfiture.

² fuisse Crémier: factas esse Alscheski: fecisse Ω.

¹ Livy says nothing of the nail in his accounts of the several secessions at II. xxxii, III. I, and VII. xlvi, but in VII. iii describes the practice as having originated in an attempt to relieve a pestilence.

XIX. The consular election resulted in the choice B.C. 330 of Lucius Papirius Crassus (for the second time) and Lucius Plautius Venox. At the outset of this year Volscian ambassadors from Fabrateria and Luca came to Rome asking protection, and promising that, if

2 fidem reciperentur : si a Samnitium armis defensi
 essent, se sub imperio populi Romani fideliter atque
 3 oboedienter futuros. Missi tum ab senatu legati denuntiatumque Samnitibus ut eorum populorum finibus vim abstinerent; valuitque ea legatio, non tam quia pacem volebant Samnites quam quia nondum parati erant ad bellum.

4 Eodem anno Privernas bellum initum, cuius socii Fundani, dux etiam fuit Fundanus, Vitruvius¹ Vaccus,² vir non domi solum sed etiam Romae clarus;
 aedes fuere in Palatio eius, quae Vaccii prata diruto
 5 aedificio publicatoque solo appellata. Adversus hunc vastantem effuse Setinum Norbanumque et Coranum agrum L. Papirius profectus haud procul castris eius 6 consedit. Vitruvio nec ut vallo se teneret adversus validiorem hostem sana constare mens, nec ut longius 7 a castris dimicaret animus suppitere; vix tota extra portam castrorum explicata acie, fugam magis retro
 quain proelium aut hostem spectante milite, sine 8 consilio, sine audacia depugnat. Ut et levi momento nec ambigue est victus, ita brevitate ipsa loci facili-que receptu in tam propinqua castra haud aegre 9 militem a multa caede est tutatus; nec fere quisquam
 in ipso certamine, pauci in turba fugae extremae, cum in castra ruerent, caesi; primisque tenebris Priver-

¹ Vitruvius F² (or F³) Sigonius: uitrubius Ω: uitrubrius
LA (in §§ 6 and 10 the MSS. give uitrub-).

² Vaccus γ: baccus Ω (but uacci below).

defended from Samnite aggressions, they would be B.C. 330 loyal and obedient subjects of the Roman People. The senate thereupon sent envoys to the Samnites and warned them to do no violence to the territories of those cities. The embassy was effective, not so much because the Samnites desired peace, as because they were unprepared, as yet, for war.

The same year saw the beginning of the war with Privernum. The enemy had the Fundanians for allies, and even a Fundanian general, by the name of Vitruvius Vaccus. He was a man of distinction, not only in his own city, but in Rome as well, where he had a house on the Palatine, at the place which, after the building had been demolished and the area confiscated, was known as the Meadows of Vaccus. He was spoiling, far and wide, the territories of Setia, Norba, and Cora, when Lucius Papirius marched out to confront him, and took up a position not far from the other's camp. Vitruvius had neither the strength of mind to remain behind his rampart in the face of a more powerful opponent, nor the courage to fight at a distance from his works. The last of his troops were scarcely clear of the camp gates and his line deployed, and the soldiers were thinking more of flight than of battle or the enemy, when he began, without showing either prudence or audacity, a critical engagement. He was easily and decisively defeated; yet, because his camp was so near and so readily accessible, he was able without great difficulty to save his men from heavy losses; indeed, there were hardly any slain in the battle itself, and in the flight only a few amongst the stragglers, as they rushed into the camp. Under cover of the earliest dusk they sought Privernum in a panic-stricken

LIVY

.v.c.
424 num inde petitum agmine trepido, ut muris potius
quam vallo sese tutarentur.

A Priverno Plautius alter consul pervastatis passim
agris praedaque abacta in agrum Fundanum exer-10 citum inducit. Ingredienti fines senatus Fundanorum occurrit; negant se pro Vitruvio sectamque eius
secutis precatum venisse, sed pro Fundano populo, quem extra culpam belli esse ipsum Vitruvium
iudicasse, cum receptaculum fugae Privernum habu-11 erit, non patriam.¹ Priverni igitur hostes populi Romani quaerendos persequendosque esse, qui simul
a Fundanis ac Romanis utriusque patriae immemores
defecerint: Fundanis pacem esse et animos Romanos 12 et gratam memoriam acceptae civitatis. Orare se con-sulem ut bellum ab innoxio populo abstineat; agros
urbem corpora ipsorum coniugumque ac liberorum
suorum in potestate populi Romani esse futuraque.
13 Conlaudatis Fundanis consul litterisque Romam missis
in officio Fundanos esse ad Privernum flexit iter.
Prius animadversum in eos qui capita coniurationis
14 fuerant a consule scribit Claudio; ad trecentos
quinquaginta ex coniuratis vincitos Romam missos, eamque ditionem ab senatu non acceptam, quod
egentium atque humilium poena defungi velle Fundanum populum censuerint. XX. Privernum duobus consularibus exercitibus cum obsideretur,

¹ patriam Δ^1 (or Δ^2) τ : patriam fundanos Ω : patriam fundos ζ .

throng, to obtain for themselves the protection of walls in place of a rampart.

From Privernum the other consul Plautius, after everywhere pillaging the fields and driving off the cattle, led his army into the domain of Fundi. As he crossed the border he was met by the Fundanian senate, who said that they had come to plead, not for Vitruvius and his followers, but for the people of Fundi, whom even Vitruvius himself had cleared of responsibility for the war, when he sought refuge in Privernum and not in his native city. It was therefore in Privernum that the Roman People should seek out and punish its enemies, who had fallen away at the same time from Fundi and from Rome, unmindful of either allegiance: the Fundani were peaceful, their sympathies were Roman, and they held in grateful recollection the gift of citizenship. They begged the consul to make no war upon an innocent people, and declared that their lands, their city, their persons, and those of their wives and children were subject to the dominion of the Roman People and would so remain. The consul heartily commended them, and announcing in a dispatch to Rome that the Fundanians were loyal, turned aside and marched against Privernum. Claudio¹ writes that before he set out, the consul executed the leaders of the plot, and sent some three hundred and fifty of the conspirators in chains to Rome; but that the senate would not accept of their surrender, being persuaded that the people of Fundi sought to escape with the punishment of their poor and lowly.

XX. While the two consular armies were laying siege to Privernum, the other consul was recalled to

B.C. 329

¹ Q. Claudio Quadrigarius, the annalist. See Introd. p. xxx.

LIVY

A.D.C. alter consul comitiorum causa Romam revocatus.
425 2 Carreres eo anno in circu primum statuti.

Nondum perfunctos eura Privernatis belli tumultus
Gallici fama atrox invasit, haud ferme unquam
3 neglecta patribus. Extemplo igitur consules novi L.
Aemilius Mamercinus et C. Plautius,¹ eo ipso die, Kalendis Quinetilibus, quo magistratum inierunt, comparare inter se provincias iussi, et Mamercinus,
cui Gallicum bellum evenerat, scribere exercitum 4 sine ulla vacationis venia; quin opificum quoque volgus et sellularii, minime militiae idoneum genus, exciti dicuntur; Veiosque ingens exercitus contrac-5 tus, ut inde obviam Gallis iretur; longius discedine alio itinere hostis falleret ad urbem incedens, non placuit. Paucos deinde post dies satis explorata temporis eius quiete a Gallis Privernum omnis conversa vis.

6 Duplex inde fama est: alii vi captam urbem Vitruviumque vivum in potestatem venisse, alii priusquam ultima adhiberetur vis, ipsos² se in deditionem consuli³ caduceum praferentes⁴ permisisse 7 auctores sunt Vitruviumque ab suis traditum. Senatus de Vitruvio Privernatibusque consultus consulem

¹ C. Plautius T² Sigan. (C.I.L. i.² p. 45): G. Plautius (or
-ci-) PFUO: plautius MDLA: placius H: plutius T.

² ipsos ς: ipsum Ω.

³ consuli Doujat (Walters): cōs (or cos or coñs or coñs) Ω:
consulis ς.

⁴ praferentes ς: praferentis Ω.

¹ The cells were stalls, having a bar across the front which was thrown down to release the chariots at the start of the race.

² July 1st was the normal day for beginning the official year from 391 B.C. to 153 B.C., when it was changed to January 1st.

Rome to hold the elections. Chariot cells were built this year for the first time in the Circus.¹ B.C. 329

The war with Privernum was not yet out of the way, when there came an alarming report of a Gallic rising, a warning which the senate almost never disregarded. Accordingly, without a moment's hesitation, the new consuls, Lucius Aemilius Mamercinus and Gaius Plautius, were directed, on the very day on which they entered office—the Kalends of July²—to divide the commands between them, and Mamercinus, to whom the Gallic war had fallen, was bidden to enlist an army without granting a single exemption; indeed it is said that a rabble of craftsmen even, and sedentary mechanics, was called out—a type the least qualified of all for military service. An enormous army was brought together at Veii, which was to be the base for the campaign against the Gauls; further afield they would not go, lest the enemy, advancing upon the City, might slip by them on another road. After a few days it became quite evident that no disturbance on the part of the Gauls was to be apprehended at that time, whereupon the whole array was directed against Privernum.

From this point there is a twofold tradition: some say that the city was carried by storm, and that Vitruvius was taken alive; others, that before the final assault was made, the people came out with a flag of truce³ to the consul and surrendered, and that Vitruvius was betrayed by his own followers. The senate, being consulted regarding Vitruvius and the Prvernates, commanded the

¹ The caduceus (κηρύκειον) was actually a herald's staff.

Plautium dirutis Priverni muris praesidioque valido imposito ad triumphum accersit: Vitruvium in carcere¹ adservari iussit, quoad consul redisset, tum verberatum necari. Aedes eius, quae essent in Palatio, diruendas, bona Semoni Sango censuerunt consecranda; quodque aeris ex eis redactum est, ex eo aenei orbes facti positi in sacello Sangus adversus aedem Quirini. De senatu Prvernate ita decretum, ut qui senator Prverni post defectionem ab Romanis mansisset trans Tiberim lege eadem qua Veliterni habitaret. His ita decretis usque ad triumphum Plauti silentium de Prvernatis fuit; post triumphum consul necato Vitruvio sociisque eius noxae apud satiatos iam suppliciis nocentium tutam mentionem de Prvernatis ratus, "Quoniam autores defectionis" inquit, "meritas poenas et ab immortalibus et a vobis habent, patres conscripti, quid placet de innoxia multitudine fieri? Evidem, etsi meae partes exquirendae magis sententiae quam dandae sunt, tamen, cum videam Prvernates vicinos Samnitibus esse, unde nunc nobis incertissima pax est, quam minimum irarum inter nos illosque relinqu velim."

XXI. Cum ipsa per se res anceps esset, prout cuiusque ingenium erat atrocius mitiusve suadentibus,

¹ in carcere F^x over erasure) Madrig: in carcerem Ω.

¹ Semo Sangus—or Sancus—was another name for Dius Fidius, the god of oaths, and was identified with Hercules, who was himself closely associated with Jupiter. See Warde Fowler, Roman Festivals of the Republic, pp. 135–145.

² See chap. xiv. § 6.

B.C. 329

consul Plautius to raze the walls of Privernum, and placing a strong garrison in the town, to come to Rome and triumph. Vitruvius was to be held a prisoner till the consul should return, and then scourged and put to death; his house on the Palatine was to be pulled down, and his goods dedicated to Semo Sangus.¹ Out of the bronze which his chattels realized were fashioned bronze disks, which were placed in the shrine of Sangus, over against the temple of Quirinus. Concerning the senate of Privernum, it was decreed that any senator who had remained in Privernum after its defection from the Romans should dwell across the Tiber on the same terms as the Veliterni.² These decrees having been promulgated, no more was said about the Privernates, until Plautius had triumphed. After his triumph the consul caused Vitruvius and his associates in wrongdoing to be executed, and deeming it now safe to take up the question of the Privernates with men who were already sated with the punishment of the guilty, spoke as follows: "Since the authors of rebellion have now received the reward they merited, at the hands of the immortal gods, and at your own hands, Conscription Fathers, what is your pleasure regarding the innocent multitude? For my own part, though it becomes me rather to ask opinions than to offer one, yet when I see that the Privernates are neighbours to the Samnites, whose peaceful relations with ourselves are at this time most precarious, I could wish that as little bad feeling as possible might be left between them and us."

XXI. The question was of itself a hard one to decide, and every senator argued, as his own nature tum incertiora omnia unus ex Privernatibus legatis fecit, magis condicionis in qua natus esset quam praesentis necessitatis memor; qui interrogatus a quodam tristioris sententiae auctore quam poenam meritos Privernates censeret, "Eam" inquit "quam merentur qui se libertate dignos censem." Cuius cum feroci responso infestiores factos videret consul eos qui ante Privernatium causam impugnabant, ut ipse benigna interrogatione mitius responsum eliceret, "Quid si poenam" inquit "remittimus vobis? Qualem nos pacem vobiscum habituros speremus?" "Si bonam dederitis" inquit, "et fidam et perpetuam; si malam, haud diuturnam." Tum vero minari, nec id ambigue, Privernatem quidam, et illis vocibus ad rebellandum incitari pacatos populos; pars mitior¹ senatus ad meliora² responsum trahere et dicere viri et liberi vocem auditam: an credi posse ullum populum aut hominem denique in ea condicione cuius eum paeniteat diutius quam necesse sit mansurum? Ibi pacem esse fidam ubi voluntarii pacati sint, neque eo loco ubi servitutem esse velint, fidem sperandam esse.

¹ mitior Duker: melior Ω.

² meliora Ω: molliora (with melior instead of mitior) Gronovius, Walters and Conway.

prompted him, for severity or mercy; but the whole situation was rendered even more uncertain by one of the deputation from Privernum, who possessed a livelier sense of the condition in which he had been born than of the exigencies of the actual crisis. This man, on being asked by a certain advocate of harsher measures what punishment he thought the Privernates merited, replied, "That punishment which is merited by those who deem themselves worthy to be free." The consul perceived that this proud answer had increased the hostility of those who were before assailing the cause of the Prvernates. In the hope that he might himself, by putting a more kindly question, elicit a friendlier response, "What," said he, "if we remit your punishment? What sort of peace may we hope to have with you?" "If you grant us a good one," was the answer, "you may look to find it faithfully and permanently kept; if a bad one, you must not expect that it will long endure." Whereat some cried out that the Prvernate was threatening them, and in no ambiguous terms, and asserted that by such words as those pacified peoples were roused up to rebellion. But the more merciful party in the senate put a better construction on his answer, and pronounced it the utterance of a man, and a man free-born. Was it credible, they asked, that any nation, or for that matter any man, should abide longer than he must in a condition that was painful? That peace, they asserted, was faithfully observed where the terms were willingly accepted; they must not hope for loyalty in a quarter where they sought to impose servitude.

LIVY

A.U.C.
425

8 In hanc sententiam maxime consul ipse inclinavit
 animos, identidem ad principes sententiarum con-sulares, uti exaudiri posset a pluribus, dicendo eos
 demum qui nihil praeterquam de libertate cogitent 10 dignos esse qui Romani fiant. Itaque et in senatu causam obtinuere, et ex auctoritate patrum latum ad
 populum est ut Privernatibus civitas daretur.

11 Eodem anno Anxur trecenti in coloniam missi sunt; bina iugera agri acceperunt.

A.U.C.
26427

XXII. Secutus est annus nulla re belli domive insignis, P. Plautio Proculo P. Cornelio Scapula consulibus, praeterquam quod Fregellas—Signinorum is-ager, deinde Volscorum fuerat—colonia deducta et populo visceratio data a M. Flavio in funere matris.
 3 Erant qui per speciem honorandae parentis meritam mercedem populo solutam interpretarentur, quod
 eum die dicta ab aedilibus crimine stupratae matris
 4 familiae absolvisset. Data visceratio in praeteritam iudicii gratiam honoris etiam ei causa fuit. Tribunus-que¹ plebei proximis comitiis absens potentibus praefertur.

5 Palaepolis fuit haud procul inde ubi nunc Neapolis
 sita est; duabus urbibus populus idem habitabat.²
 6 Cumis erant oriundi; Cumani Chalcide Euboica

¹ tribunusque Zingerle: tribunatuque (wanting in O) Ω: tribunatumque Gronovius.

² habitabat F³ -: habita at MPF⁹: habitat OHTDLA:
 habitat ut UT².

The consul himself did the most to bring about the adoption of these views, by remarking repeatedly to the consulars, who led in the expression of opinion, in a voice loud enough for many to overhear, that only those who took no thought for anything save liberty were worthy of becoming Romans. Accordingly they gained their cause in the senate, and on the authorization of the Fathers a measure was brought before the people conferring citizenship on the Prvernates.

In that same year three hundred colonists were sent to Anxur, where they received each two iugera of land.

XXII. The following year, when Publius Plautius Proculus and Publius Cornelius Scapula were consuls, was not signalised by any military or domestic event, except that a colony was sent out to Fregellae—the territory had belonged to the people of Signia, and afterwards to the Volsci—and a dole of meat was given to the people by Marcus Flavius, at the funeral of his mother. Some thought that under colour of honouring his mother he had paid a price that he owed the people, because they had acquitted him, when brought to trial by the aediles, of the charge of corrupting a married woman. Though the dole was made for the past favour shown him in the trial, it was also the cause of his receiving an office; and at the next election he was chosen tribune of the plebs in his absence, in preference to some who canvassed.
B.C.
328-327

There was a city called Palaepolis, not far from the spot where Neapolis is now, and the two cities were inhabited by one people. Cumae was their mother city, and the Cumani derive their origin originem trahunt. Classe, qua advecti ab domo fuerant, multum in ora maris eius quod accolunt potuere, primo in insulas¹ Aenariam et Pithecuras² egressi, deinde in continentem ausi sedes transferre.

LIVY

U.C.
6-427

7 Haec civitas cum suis viribus tum Samnitium infidae adversus Romanos societati freta, sive pestilentiae quae Romanam urbem adorta nuntiabatur fidens, multa hostilia adversus Romanos agrum Campanum 8 Falernumque incolentes fecit. Igitur L. Cornelio Lentulo Q. Publilio Philone iterum consulibus, fetialibus Palaepolim ad res repetendas missis, cum relatum esset a Graecis, gente lingua magis strenua quam factis, ferox responsum, ex auctoritate patrum 9 populus Palaepolitanis bellum fieri iussit. Inter consules provinciis comparatis bello Graeci persequendi Publilio evenerunt; Cornelius altero exercitu Samnitibus, si qua se moverent, oppositus—fama autem erat defectioni Campanorum imminentes admoturos castra—ibi optimum visum Cornelio stativa habere.

U.C.
7-428
XXIII. Ab utroque consule exiguum spem pacis cum Samnitibus esse certior fit senatus: Publilius³ duo milia Nolanorum militum et quattuor Samnitium magis Nolanis cogentibus quam voluntate Graecorum 2 recepta Palaepoli;⁴ Cornelius dilectum indictum a

¹ in insulas ζ : insulas Ω : insulam A.

² Pithecuras ζ : phitecuras MPFO: fitecuras U: pitecuras HTDLA.

³ Publilius edd.: publius Ω (omitted by U).

⁴ Palaepoli Walters and Conway: Palaepoli miserat Sigonius: palaepoli romam miserat (or -nt) Ω .

¹ Islands in the northern part of the Bay of Naples. By Pithecurae Livy seems to mean the islands of this group other than Aenaria, i.e. Pithecura itself, Leucothea, and Sidonia; or perhaps he calls the whole group Pithecurae and means "Aenaria and the rest of the Pithecurae."

from Chalcis in Euboea. Thanks to the fleet in which they had sailed from their home, they enjoyed much power on the coast of that sea by which they dwell; having landed first on the island of Aenaria and the Pitheciusae,¹ they afterwards ventured to transfer their seat to the mainland. This nation, relying in part on its own strength, in part on the faithlessness shown by the Samnites in their alliance with the Romans, or perhaps on the plague which was reported as having assailed the City of Rome, committed many hostile acts against the Romans dwelling in the districts of Campania and Falerii. When therefore Lucius Cornelius Lentulus and Quintus Publilius Philo (for the second time) were consuls, fetials were dispatched to Palaepolis to demand redress; and on their bringing back a spirited answer from the Greeks—a race more valiant in words than in deeds—the people acted upon a resolution of the senate and commanded that war be made upon Palaepolis. By the division of the commands between the consuls, the war with the Greeks fell to Publilius; Cornelius, with another army, was ordered to be ready for the Samnites, in case they should take the field; and since it was rumoured that they were only waiting to bring up their army the moment the Campanians began a revolt, that seemed to be the best place for the permanent encampment of Cornelius.

XXIII. Both consuls informed the senate that there was very little hope of peace with the Samnites: Publilius reported that two thousand soldiers from Nola and four thousand Samnites had been received into Palaepolis,—rather under compulsion from the Nolani than by the good-will of

B.C.
328–326

LIVY

c.
428

magistratibus universumque Samnium erectum ac vicinos populos, Privernatem Fundanumque et For-3 mianum, haud ambigue sollicitari. Ob haec cum legatos mitti placuisse prius ad Samnites quam bellum fieret, responsum redditur ab Samnitibus 4 ferox. Ulro incusabant iniurias Romanorum, neque eo neglegentius ea quae ipsis obicerentur purgabant:
 5 haud ullo publico consilio auxiliove iuvari Graecos
 nec Fundanum Formianumve a se sollicitatos; quippe minime paenitere se virium suarum, si bellum placeat.
 6 Ceterum non posse dissimulare aegre pati civitatem Samnitium quod Fregellas ex Volscis captas dirutasque ab se restituerit Romanus populus, coloniamque
 in Samnitium agro imposuerint, quam coloni eorum 7 Fregellas appellant; eam se contumeliam iniuriamque, ni sibi ab iis qui fecerint dematur, ipsos 8 omni vi depulsuros esse. Cum Romanus legatus ad disceptandum eos ad communes socios atque amicos vocaret, "Quid perplexe agimus?" inquit;
 "Nostra certamina, Romani, non verba legatorum
 nec hominum quisquam disceptator, sed campus Campanus, in quo concurrendum est, et arma et 9 communis Mars belli decernet. Proinde inter Capuam Suessulamque castra castris conferamus, et Samnis Romanusne imperio Italiam regat decer-

B.C.
327-326

the Greeks; Cornelius, that the Samnite magistrates had proclaimed a levy, and that all Samnium was up, while the neighbouring cities of Privernum, Fundi, and Formiae were being openly solicited to join. The senate having, in view of these facts, voted to send ambassadors to the Samnites before declaring war, received a defiant answer from them. Indeed they actually accused the Romans of improper conduct, yet without neglecting to clear their own skirts—if they could—of the charges brought against them: the Greeks, they said, were receiving no public counsel or support from them, nor had they asked the Fundani or Formiani to revolt; indeed they were quite strong enough to look out for themselves, if they chose to fight; on the other hand, they could not dissemble the chagrin of the Samnite nation that Fregellae, which they had captured from the Volsei and destroyed, should have been restored by the Roman People, and a colony planted in the territory of the Samnites which the Roman settlers called by that name; this was an insult and an injury, which, if its authors did not themselves recall it, they proposed to resist with might and main. When the Roman legate invited them to discuss the question with the common allies and friends of both, the Samnite spokesman said, “Why do we beat about the bush? Our differences, Romans, will be decided, not by the words of envoys nor by any man’s arbitration, but by the Campanian plain—where we must meet in battle,—by the sword, and by the common chance of war. Let us encamp then face to face betwixt Suessula and Capua, and settle the question whether Samnite or Roman is to govern Italy.” The Roman

A.U.C. 7-428 10 namus." Legati Romanorum cum se non quo hostis vocasset¹ sed quo imperatores sui duxissent ituros esse respondissent . . .²

Iam Publilius inter Palaepolim Neapolimque loco opportune capto diremerat hostibus societatem auxilii mutui qua, ut quisque locus premeretur, inter se usi 11 fuerant. Itaque cum et comitiorum dies instaret et Publilium imminentem hostium muris avocari ab spe capienda in dies urbis haud e re publica esset, 12 actum cum tribunis est, ad populum ferrent ut, cum Q. Publilius Philo consulatu abisset, pro consule rem gereret quoad debellatum cum Graecis esset.

13 L. Cornelio, quia ne eum quidem in Samnium iam ingressum revocari ab impetu belli placebat, litterae missae ut dictatorem comitiorum causa diceret.

14 Dixit M. Claudium Marcellum; ab eo magister equitum dictus Sp. Postumius. Nec tamen ab dictatore comitia sunt habita, quia vitione creatus esset in disquisitionem venit. Consulti augures 15 vitiosum videri dictatorem pronuntiaverunt. Eam rem tribuni suspectam infamemque criminando fecerunt: nam neque facile fuisse id vitium nosci, cum consul oriens de nocte³ silentio diceret dictatorem, neque ab consule cuiquam publice

¹ vocasset T²-,: uocasset O¹: uocaret O: uocassent Ω⁵.

² Madvig thinks that a passage of some length, narrating the outcome of the embassy, the declaration of war, and the beginning of the siege of Naples, has been lost.

³ oriens de nocte Drakenborch (oriens nocte Rubenius): oriende nocte F: oriente nocte Ω: oriente noctis D³A: oriente sub nocte O.

¹ This is the first recorded instance of the continuation of a consul's powers beyond his year of office, although in 464 a former consul, T. Quinctius, had been invested with consular authority for a campaign (III. iv. 10).

legates having replied that they should go, not where the enemy summoned them, but where their ^{B.C.} ₃₂₇₋₃₂₆ generals led them . . .

By taking up a favourable position between Palaepolis and Neapolis, Publilius had already deprived the enemy of that mutual exchange of assistance which they had made use of, as one place after another was hard pressed. Accordingly, since the time drew near for the elections, and it was not for the advantage of the state that Publilius, who was threatening the enemy's walls, should be called away from the prospective capture of their city, which might happen any day, the senate got the tribunes to propose a popular enactment, providing that Quintus Publilius Philo should, on the expiration of his consulship, conduct the campaign as proconsul until the Greeks should have been conquered.¹

To Lucius Cornelius, who had already entered Samnium, and whom they were equally unwilling to withdraw from the vigorous prosecution of the war, they sent a letter directing him to name a dictator for conducting the elections. He named Marcus Claudius Marcellus, who named Spurius Postumius master of the horse. But the comitia were not held by the dictator, inasmuch as the regularity of his appointment was called in question. The augurs were consulted, and announced that the procedure appeared faulty. This sentence the tribunes by their accusations made suspect and infamous; for the flaw, as they pointed out, could not easily have been discovered, since the consul rose in the night and appointed the dictator in silence, neither had the consul written to anyone

privatum de ea re scriptum esse nec quemquam 16 mortalium extare qui se vidisse aut audisse quid dicat quod auspiciū dirimeret, neque augures divinare Romae sedentes potuisse quid in castris consuli vitii obvenisset; cui non apparere, quod
 plebeius dictator sit, id vitium auguribus visum?
 17 Haec aliaque ab tribunis nequ quam iactata; tandem¹
 ad interregnum res redit, dilatisque alia atque alia
 de causa comitiis quartus decimus demum interrex
 L. Aemilius consules creat C. Poetelium² L. Papirium Mugillanum; Cursorem in aliis annalibus invenio.

XXIV. Eodem anno Alexandream in Aegypto
 proditum conditam, Alexandrumque Epiri regem
 ab exsule Lucano interfectum sortes Dodonaei Iovis
 2 eventu adfirmasse. Accito ab Tarentinis in Italiam data dictio erat, caveret Acherusiam aquam Pando-3 siamque urbem: ibi fatis eius terminum dari. Eoque ocius transmisit in Italiam ut quam maxime procul
 abesset urbe Pandosia in Epiro et Acheronte amni, quem ex Molosside fluentem in Stagna Inferna³ 4 accipit Thesprotius sinus. Ceterum ut⁴ ferme fugi-endo in media fata ruitur, cum saepe Bruttias

¹ tandem η Madvig: tamen οι wanting in O).

² Poetelium Madvig (III. xxxv. 11.: petilium (or pe-tillium) οι.

³ Stagna Inferna Walters and Conway (Plin., N.H. iv. i.
 4, Strabo vii. vii. 5): stagna inferna οι ehd.

⁴ ceterum ut η: ut ceterum οι.

¹ The founding of Alexandria and the death of Alexander of Epirus are placed five years too late. They occurred in 332 or 331 B.C.

² The name was doubtless due to the association of the Acheron in Epirus with the Acheron of the lower world.

regarding the transaction, whether officially or privately, nor was there a single mortal living who could say that he had seen or heard a thing that would bring to naught the auspices; nor yet could the augurs have divined, as they sat in Rome, what obstacle the consul had met with in the camp. Was there anyone, they would like to know, who could not see that the plebeian standing of the dictator was the thing which had seemed irregular to the augurs? These and other objections were made by the tribunes to no purpose; the state at length reverted to an interregnum, and after the comitia had been again and again postponed, on one pretext or another, at last the fourteenth interrex, Lucius Aemilius, procured the election of consuls, viz. Gaius Poetelius and Lucius Papirius Mugillanus—in other annals I find the name of Cursor.

XXIV. It is recorded that in that same year B.C. 326 Alexandria in Egypt was founded, and that Alexander, king of Epirus, being murdered by a Lucanian exile, fulfilled by his death the oracle of Jupiter at Dodona.¹ On his being summoned to Italy by the Tarentines, the oracle had warned him to beware of the Acherusian water and the city Pandosia, for there he was destined to end his days. On this account he had passed over with the more speed into Italy, that he might be as far removed as possible from the city of Pandosia in Epirus and from the river Acheron, which, debouching from Molossis into the Infernal Marshes,² discharges its waters into the Thesprotian Gulf. But, as generally happens, in seeking to escape his doom he ran full upon it. Having repeatedly defeated the Bruttian Lucanasque legiones fudisset, Heracleam Tarentinorum coloniam ex Lucanis, Sipontum Apulorum, Consentiamque¹ Bruttiorum ac Terinam,² alias inde Messapiorum³ ac Lucanorum cepisset urbes et trecentas familias illustres in Epirum, quas obsidum numero haberet, misisset, haud procul Pandosia urbe, inimicente Lucanis ac Bruttiis finibus, tres tumulos aliquantum inter se distantes insedit, ex quibus incursionses in omnem partem agri hostilis faceret; et ducentos ferme Lucanorum exsules circa se pro fidis habebat, ut pleraque eius generis ingenia sunt, cum fortuna mutabilem gerentes fidem.

7 Imbres continui campis omnibus inundatis⁴ cum interclusissent trifariam exercitum a mutuo inter se auxilio, duo praesidia, quae sine rege erant, improviso hostium adventu opprimuntur; deletisque eis ad ipsius obsidionem omnes con- versi. Inde ab Lucanis exsilibus ad suos nuntii missi sunt, pactoque reditu promissum est regem aut vivum aut mortuum in potestatem daturos.

9 Ceterum cum delectis ipse egregium facinus ausus per medios erumpit hostes, et ducem Lucanorum comminus congressum obtruncat;

10 contrahensque suos ex fuga palatos pervenit ad amnem, ruinis recentibus pontis, quem vis aquae

11 abstulerat, indicantem iter. Quem cum incerto

¹ coloniam ex Lucanis, Sipontum Apulorum, Consentiamque Bruttiorum Weissenborn: coloniam Consentiam (Momits Consentiam) ex Lucanis Sipontumque Bruttiorum (Bruttiorum coloniam O) Ω .

² ac Terinam Sigonius: acerinam (or -um) Ω : acentinam M.

³ Messapiorum A³-, : massepiorum(-porum = priorum L) Ω

⁴ inundatis Madrig: inundates MPT: inundantes Ω .

and Lucanian levies; having taken Heraclea, a B.C. 326 Tarentine colony, from the Lucanians, and Sipontum belonging to the Apulians, and the Bruttian towns Consentia and Terina, and after that other towns of the Messapians and Lucanians; and having sent to Epirus three hundred illustrious families, to be held as hostages, he took up his station not far from the city Pandosia, which looks down upon the borders of Lucania and Bruttium, on three hills that stand some little distance apart from one another, that he might thence make incursions into every quarter of the enemy's country. He had about him some two hundred Lucanian exiles, whom he trusted; but their loyalty, like that of most men of that nation, was prone to change with the change of fortune.

Continuous rains, which flooded all the fields, having isolated the three divisions of the army and cut them off from mutual assistance, the two bodies other than the king's were surprised and overpowered by the enemy, who, after putting them all to the sword, proceeded with their entire strength to blockade Alexander himself. Whereupon the Lucanian exiles sent messengers to their countrymen, and promised that, if assured of restoration, they would give up the king, alive or dead, into their hands. But Alexander, with a chosen band, made a daring attempt, and broke out through the midst of his foes, cutting down the Lucanian general in a hand-to-hand encounter. Then, rallying his followers, who had become scattered in the flight, he came to a river, where the fresh ruins of a bridge, which the violence of the current had swept away, pointed out the road. As his company were making vado transiret agmen, fessus metu ac labore miles, increpans nomen abominandum fluminis, "Iure Acheros vocaris" inquit. Quod ubi ad aures accidit regis, adiecit extemplo animum fatis suis sub-12 stitique, dubius an transiret. Tum Sotimus, minister ex regiis pueris, quid in tanto discrimine periculi cunctaretur interrogans, indicat 13 Lucanos insidiis quaerere locum. Quos¹ ubi respexit rex procul grege facto venientes, stringit gladium, et per medium amnem transmittit

LIVY

 equum; iamque in vadum egressum eminus 14 veruto Lucanus exsul transfigit. Lapsum inde cum inherente telo corpus exanime detulit amnis in hostium praesidia. Ibi foeda laceratio corporis facta. Namque praeciso medio partem Consentiam misere, pars ipsis retenta ad ludibrium.
 15 Quae cum iaculis saxisque procul incesseretur, mulier una ultra humanarum irarum fidem saevienti
 turbae immixta, ut parumper sustinerent precata, flens ait virum sibi liberosque captos apud hostes
 esse; sperare corpore regio utcumque mulcato se 16 suos redempturam. Is finis lacerationi fuit, sepultumque Consentiae quod membrorum reliquum fuit
 cura mulieris unius, ossaque Metapontum [ad hostes
 17 remissa, inde Epirum devecta ad Cleopatram uxorem

¹ quos A² or A³) : quod Ω.

¹ Acheros is apparently a by-form of Acheron. The soldier associated the word with ἄχος, "pain." The stream is thought to have been a small tributary of the Neaethus.

² Apparently Alexander had a garrison there.

their way across the stream by a treacherous ford, a discouraged and exhausted soldier cried out, cursing the river's ill-omened name, " You are rightly called the Acheros!"¹ When the king heard this, he at once bethought him of the oracle, and stopped, undecided whether he should cross or not. Whereat Sotimus, one of the young nobles who attended him, asked why he hesitated in so dangerous a crisis, and pointed out the Lucanians, who were looking for a chance to waylay him. With a backward glance the king perceived them at a little distance coming towards him in a body, and drawing his sword, urged his horse through the middle of the stream. He had already gained the shallow water, when a Lucanian exile cast a javelin that transfixed him. He fell with the javelin in his lifeless body, and the current carried him down to the enemy's guard. By them his corpse was barbarously mangled, for they cut it in two through the middle, and sending a half to Consentia, kept the other half to make sport for themselves. They were standing off and pelting it with javelins and stones, when a solitary woman, exposing herself to the inhuman savagery of the raging crowd, besought them to forbear a little, and with many tears declared that her husband and children were prisoners in the hands of the enemy, and that she hoped that with the body of the king, however much disfigured, she might redeem them. This ended the mutilation. What was left of the corpse was cremated at Consentia by the care of none other than the woman, and the bones sent back to Metapontum,² to the enemy; whence they were conveyed by ship to Epirus, to his wife Cleopatra and his sister

sororemque Olympiadem, quarum mater magni 18 Alexandri altera, soror altera fuit. Haec de Alexandri Epirensis tristi eventu, quamquam Romano
bello fortuna eum abstinuit, tamen, quia in Italia
bella gessit, paucis dixisse satis sit.

XXV. Eodem anno lectisternium Romae, quintum post conditam urbem, iisdem quibus ante placandis 2 habitum est deis. Novi deinde consules iussu populi cum misissent qui indicerent Samnitibus bellum, ipsi maiore conatu quam adversus Graecos cuneta
parabant; et alia nova nihil tum animo tale agitanti-bus accesserunt auxilia. Lucani atque Apuli, quibus gentibus nihil ad eam diem cum Romano populo
fuerat, in fidem venerunt, arma virosque ad bellum pollicentes; foedere ergo in amicitiam accepti.
Eodem tempore etiam in Samnio res prospere
4 gesta. Tria oppida in potestatem venerunt, Allifae Callifae Rufrium, aliasque ager primo adventu consulum longe lateque est pervastatus.

5 Hoc bello tam prospere¹ commisso, alteri quoque
bello, quo Graeci obsidebantur, iam finis aderat.
Nam praeterquam quod intersaeptis munitis
hostium pars parti abscisa erat, foediora aliquanto 6 intra muros iis² quibus hostis territabat fiebant,³ et velut capti a suis met ipsi⁴ praesidiis indigna in⁵ liberis

¹ prospere Ω: propere HT: prope (for prope = propere) M.

² iis Σ: his Ω.

³ fiebant Luterbacher: patiebant Ω.

⁴ ipsi Perizonius Gronovius: ipsis Ω.

⁵ in Gronovius: iam Ω.

¹ The first of these banquets for the gods took place in 399
B.C., the others in 392, 364, and 348.

Olympias, of whom the latter was mother, the former sister, to Alexander the Great. This brief account of the sad end of Alexander may be excused on the score of his having warred in Italy, albeit Fortune held him back from attacking the Romans.

XXV. A lectisternium, the fifth since the founding of the City, was held this year, to propitiate the same deities as before.¹ Then the new consuls, having sent fetials, as commanded by the people, to declare war on the Samnites, not only began themselves to make ready for it, on a much greater scale in every respect than they had done against the Greeks, but received new and at that time quite unlooked-for help. For the Lucanians and Apulians, nations which until then had had no dealings with the Roman People, put themselves under their protection and promised arms and men for the war, and were accordingly received into a treaty of friendship. At the same time, the Romans conducted a successful campaign in Samnium. Three towns—Allifae, Callifae, and Rufrium—fell into their hands, and the rest of the country was devastated far and wide at the first coming of the consuls.

While this war was beginning in so prosperous a fashion, the other, against the Greeks, was in a fair way to be concluded. For not only were a part of the besieged cut off from the rest by the intervening entrenchments of the Romans, but things were going on within their walls much more dreadful than the perils with which the enemy threatened them; and as though the inhabitants had been made prisoners by their own defenders, they were subjected to outrage even in the persons of their

quoque ac coniugibus et quae captarum urbium
 7 extrema sunt patiebantur. Itaque cum et a Tarento et a Samnitibus fama esset nova auxilia ventura, Samnitium plus quam vellent intra moenia esse
 8 rebantur, Tarentinorum iuventutem, Graeci Graecos, haud minus per quos Samniti Nolanoque quam ut Romanis hostibus resisterent, exspectabant; pos-tremo levissimum malorum deditio ad Romanos visa:
 9 Charilaus et Nymphius, principes civitatis, communicato inter se consilio partes ad rem agendam divisere, ut alter ad imperatorem Romanorum
 transfugeret, alter subsisteret ad praebendam
 10 opportunam consilio urbem. Charilaus fuit qui ad Publilium Philonem venit, et quod bonum faustum
 felix Palaepolitanis populoque Romano esset, tradere 11 se ait moenia statuisse; eo facto, utrum ab se prodita
 an servata patria videatur, in fide Romana positum
 esse; sibi privatim nec pacisci quicquam nec petere; 12 publice petere quam pacisci magis ut, si successisset inceptum, cogitaret populus Romanus potius cum quanto studio periculoque redditum in amicitiam suam esset, quam qua¹ stultitia et temeritate de 13 officio decessum. Conlaudatus ab imperatore tria milia militum ad occupandam eam partem urbis

¹ quam qua U² (or L¹) T² A³: quamquam (quemquam M?).
Ω (including M¹).

children and their wives, and suffered all the horrors of captured cities. And so, on a report that reinforcements were on their way, both from Tarentum and from the Samnites, they felt that they had within their city more Samnites than they wanted, but being Greeks, looked forward to the coming of their fellow Greeks, the young men of Tarentum, to enable them to resist the Samnites and the Nolani, no less than their enemies, the Romans. In the end it appeared to them that surrender to the Romans was the least intolerable evil. Charilaus and Nymphius, their principal citizens, took counsel together, and arranged the part that each should play in order to bring this about. One was to go over to the Roman general, the other to remain behind and make the city ready for the accomplishment of their design. It was Charilaus who went to Publilius Philo, and praying that it might turn out a good and favourable and fortunate thing for Palaeopolis and for the Roman People, announced that he had resolved to deliver up the walls. It depended, he said, upon the honour of the Romans whether, having accomplished his intention, he should appear to have betrayed his country or to have saved it. For himself in particular he neither stipulated nor requested anything; for his people he requested—though he did not stipulate—that if the enterprise succeeded, the Roman People should consider with what eagerness they had resumed the friendship, and the hazard which they ran, rather than the folly and temerity which had led them to forget their duty. The general commended him, and gave him three thousand soldiers to seize that part of the city where the Samnites were established, appointing quam Samnites insidebant accepit; praesidio ei L. Quinetius tribunus militum praepositus.

XXVI. Eodem tempore et Nymphius praetorem Samnitium arte adgressus perpulerat, ut, quoniam omnis Romanus exercitus aut circa Palaepolim aut in Samnio esset, sineret se classe circumvehi ad Romanum agrum, non oram modo maris sed ipsi urbi propinqua loca depopulaturum. Sed ut falleret, nocte proficiscendum esse extemploque naves deducendas. Quod quo maturius fieret, omnis iuventus Samnitium praeter necessarium urbis praesidium ad litus missa. Ubi dum Nymphius in tenebris et multitudine semet ipsa impediente, sedulo aliis alia imperia turbans, terit tempus, Charilaus ex composito ab sociis in urbem receptus, cum summa urbis Romano milite implesset, tolli clamorem iussit: ad quem Graeci signo accepto a principibus quievere, Nolani per aversam partem urbis via Nolam ferente¹ effugiunt. Samnitibus exclusis ab urbe, ut expeditior in praesentia fuga, ita foedior, postquam periculo evaserunt, visa, quippe qui inermes nulla rerum suarum non relicta inter hostes, ludibrium non externis modo sed etiam popularibus, spoliati atque

¹ via Nolam ferente T²A^x: uiam nolam ferentem (-tes) Ω.

¹ This shows that the Samnite general was in control in the city.

Lucius Quintius, a military tribune, to command
the force. B.C. 326

XXVI. At the same time Nymphius for his part had gone craftily to work with the Samnite commander, and pointing out that all the forces of the Romans were either about Palaepolis or in Samnium, got him to consent¹ that he should take a fleet and sail round them to the Roman seaboard, where he proposed, so he said, to ravage not only the coastal region, but the vicinity of Rome itself; it would however be necessary, in order to slip past the enemy unobserved, to put out at night, and the ships must be drawn down at once. That this might be accomplished the more expeditiously, all the Samnite soldiers, except the few who were needed to mount guard in the city, were sent down to the shore. While Nymphius was killing time there in the darkness, purposely issuing contradictory orders to confuse the throng, which was so large as to get in its own way, Charilaus, having been received into the city, as agreed upon by the conspirators, had occupied the highest part of it with Roman soldiers, whom he now commanded to give a cheer. On hearing this, the Greeks, who had received a signal from their leaders, remained still, but the Nolani fled through the opposite quarter of the city by the road that leads to Nola. The Samnites, being shut out from the town, enjoyed a momentary advantage in the ease with which they fled, but appeared in a more disgraceful light, when the danger had been left behind. Unarmed—for they had abandoned everything to the enemy—they returned to their homes despoiled and destitute, a laughing-stock not only to strangers but to their own

6 egentes domos rediere. Haud ignarus opinionis alterius, qua haec proditio ab Samnitibus facta traditur, cum auctoribus hoc dedi quibus dignius credi est, tum foedus Neapolitanum—eo enim deinde summa rei Graecorum venit—similius vero
 7 facit ipsos in amicitiam redisse. Publilio triumphus decretus, quod satis credebatur obsidione domitos hostes in fidem venisse. Duo singularia haec ei viro primum contigere, prorogatio imperii non ante in ullo facta et acto honore triumphus.

XXVII. Aliud subinde bellum cum alterius orae
 2 Graecis exortum. Namque Tarentini, cum rem Palaepolitanam vana spe auxilii aliquamdiu sustinuissent, postquam Romanos urbe potitos accepere, velut destituti ac non qui ipsi destituissent, increpare Palaepolitanos, ira atque invidia in Romanos furere, eo etiam magis, quod Lucanos et Apulos—
 nam utraque eo anno societas coepta est—in fidem
 3 populi Romani venisse allatum est: quippe propemodum per ventum ad se esse, iamque in eo rem fore, ut Romani aut hostes aut domini habendi sint.
 4 Discri men profecto rerum suarum in bello Samnitium eventuque eius verti; eam solam gentem restare, nec eam ipsam satis validam, quando Lucanus defecerit; countrymen. I am not unaware of the other tradition which ascribes the capture to betrayal by the Samnites, but have followed the authorities who are more deserving of credence; moreover, the treaty with Neapolis—to which place the Greeks now transferred the seat of government—makes it more likely that they renewed the friendship voluntarily.¹ Publilius was decreed a triumph, in consequence of a belief that the enemy had surrendered because they were forced to do so by the siege. He was the first to enjoy these two distinctions: an extension of his command, never before granted to any, and a triumph after the expiration of his term.

¹ The treaty secured advantages to the inhabitants of Palaepolis-Neapolis—of which combination Neapolis now became the head—which would hardly have been granted them if they had been subdued, and had not voluntarily surrendered.

XXVII. This war was immediately followed by the outbreak of another, with the Greeks of the eastern coast. For the Tarentines, after sustaining the people of Palaepolis for some time with delusive hopes of succour, when they learned that the Romans had got possession of the city, inveighed against the Palaopolitans, as though, instead of deserting them, they themselves had been deserted, and were raging with hatred and envy against the Romans: the more so, because they learnt that the Lucanians and Apulians had made their submission to the Roman People—for an alliance was formed that year with both these nations. The Romans, they said, were almost at the gates of Tarentum, and matters would soon be come to such a pass, that they must needs have them for enemies or masters; it was clear that their own future hinged on the outcome of the war then being waged by the Samnites; this was the only nation that continued to hold out, and indeed that nation was none too strong since the defection

- 5 quem revocari adhuc impellique ad abolendam societatem Romanam posse, si qua ars serendis discordiis adhibeatur.
- 6 Haec consilia cum apud cupidos rerum novandarum valuissent, ex iuventute quidam Lucanorum pretio adsciti, clari magis inter populares quam honesti, inter se mulcati ipsi virgis, cum corpora 7 nuda intulissent in civium coetum, vociferati sunt se, quod castra Romana ingredi ausi essent, a consulibus virgis caesos ac prope securi percussos esse.
- 8 Deformis suapte natura res cum speciem iniuriae magis quam doli p[ro]ae se ferret, concitati homines
9 cogunt clamore suo magistratus senatum vocare; et alii circumstantes concilium bellum in Romanos posecunt, alii ad concitandam in arma multitudinem agrestium discurrunt, tumultuque etiam sanos consternante animos decernitur ut societas cum Samnitibus renovaretur, legatique ad eam rem
10 mittuntur.¹ Repentina res quia quam causam nullam tam ne fidem quidem habebat, coacti a Samnitibus et obsides dare et praesidia in loca munita accipere, 11 caeci fraude et ira nihil recusarunt. Dilucere deinde brevi fraus coepit, postquam criminum falsorum auctores Tarentum commigravere; sed amissa omni² de se potestate, nihil ultra quam ut paeniteret frustra restabat.

XXVIII. Eo anno plebei Romanae velut aliud

¹ mittuntur HT²LA¹R: remittuntur DA: mittantur PFUOT²: mitteantur M: mitterentur Frigell.

² omni UOHT²A¹: omnia MFITDLA: omni iam Alschesfski.

B.C. 326

of the Lucanians; but the latter might even yet be brought back and induced to repudiate the Roman alliance, if a little art were employed in sowing discord.

These counsels having prevailed—for they were eager to fall in with novel schemes—they bribed certain young Lucanians, of greater prominence among their countrymen than respectability, who lacerated one another with rods and then exhibited their naked bodies before a concourse of their fellow citizens, crying out that for having dared to enter the Roman camp they had been ordered by the consuls to be scourged, and had narrowly escaped losing their heads. This spectacle, so hideous in itself, pointed clearly to injury and not to guile. In an uproar of excitement, the people obliged their magistrates to convoke the senate. At the meeting some crowded round and clamoured for war against the Romans, while others hurriedly departed this way and that, to rouse the inhabitants of the countryside to arms, till even the prudent lost their heads in the tumult, and it was voted to renew the alliance with the Samnites; and ambassadors were sent off to arrange it. This impulsive action, as it had no cause, so it carried no conviction; they were forced by the Samnites both to give hostages and also to admit garrisons within their strongholds; but, blinded by the cheat and by resentment, they stuck at nothing. A little later, when the false witnesses had retired to Tarentum, they began to see through the imposition; but having lost all power of independent action, they could only indulge in vain regrets.

XXVIII. In that year the liberty of the Roman initium libertatis factum est, quod necti desierunt ; mutatum autem ius ob unius feneratoris simul libi-2 dinem simul crudelitatem insignem. L. Papirius is fuit, cui cum se C. Publilius ob aes alienum paternum nexum dedisset, quae aetas formaque misericordiam elicere poterant, ad libidinem et con-3 tumeliam animum accenderunt. Florem¹ aetatis eius fructum adventicium crediti ratus, primo perlicere adulescentem sermone incesto est conatus ;

 dein, postquam aspernabantur flagitium aures, minis
 4 territare atque identidem admonere fortunae ; pos-tremo, cum ingenuitatis magis quam praesentis condicionis memorem videret, nudari iubet ver-5 beraque adferri. Quibus laceratus iuvenis cum se in publicum proripuisset, libidinem crudelitatemque 6 conquerens feneratoris, ingens vis hominum cum aetatis miseratione atque indignitate iniuriae ac-censa, tum suae condicionis liberumque suorum
 respectu, in forum atque inde agmine facto ad 7 curiam concurrit ; et cum consules tumultu repentino coacti senatum vocarent, introeuntibus in curiam patribus laceratum iuvenis tergum, pro-cumbentes ad singulorum pedes, ostentabant.
 8 Victum eo die ob impotentem iniuriam unius
 ingens vinculum fidei ; iussique consules ferre ad
 populum ne quis, nisi qui noxam meruisset, donec poenam lueret, in compedibus aut in nervo tene-

¹ Florem Ma·rig : ut florem Ω : et florem Σ.

¹ The plebs had gained political liberty on the expulsion of the kings and the adoption of the republican government. Now they were assured of personal liberty as well. The reform is put by Valerius Maximus (vi. i. 9) and Dionysius of Halicarnassus (xvi. 9) after the disaster at the Caudine Forks in 321 B.C.

plebs had as it were a new beginning; for men ceased to be imprisoned for debt.¹ The change in the law was occasioned by the notable lust and cruelty of a single usurer, Lucius Papirius, to whom Gaius Publilius had given himself up for a debt owed by his father. The debtor's youth and beauty, which might well have stirred the creditor's compassion, did but inflame his heart to lust and contumely. Regarding the lad's youthful prime as additional compensation for the loan, he sought at first to seduce him with lewd conversation: later, finding he turned a deaf ear to the base proposal, he began to threaten him and now and again to remind him of his condition; at last, when he saw that the youth had more regard to his honourable birth than to his present plight, he had him stripped and scourged. The boy, all mangled with the stripes, broke forth into the street, crying out upon the money-lender's lust and cruelty; and a great throng of people, burning with pity for his tender years, and with rage for the shameful wrong he had undergone, and considering, too, their own condition and their children's, rushed down into the Forum, and from there in a solid throng to the Curia. The consuls were forced by the sudden tumult to convene the senate; and as the Fathers entered the Curia, the people threw themselves at the feet of each, and pointed to the young lad's mutilated back. On that day, owing to one man's outrageous injury, was broken a strong bond of credit, and the consuls were ordered to carry a proposal to the people that none should be confined in shackles or in the stocks, save those who, having been guilty of some crime, were waiting to pay the penalty;

A.U.C.
428

9 retur; pecuniae creditae bona debitoris, non corpus obnoxium esset. Ita nEXI soluti, cautumque in posterum ne necterentur.

A.U.C.
429

XXIX. Eodem anno, cum satis per se ipsum Samnitium bellum et defectio repens Lucanorum auctoresque defectionis, Tarentini, sollicitos haberent patres, accessit ut et Vestinus populus Samnitibus 2 sese coniungeret. Quae res sicut eo anno sermonibus magis passim hominum iactata quam in publico ullo concilio est, ita insequentis anni consulibus, L. Furio Camillo iterum Iunio Bruto Scaevae, nulla prior potiorque visa est, de qua ad senatum 3 referrent. Et quamquam non nova¹ res erat, tamen tanta cura patres incessit, ut pariter eam susceptam neglectamque timerent, ne aut impunitas eorum lascivia superbiaque aut bello poenae expeditiae metu propinquu atque ira concirent finitos populos; 4 et erat genus omne abunde bello Samnitibus par, Marsi Paelignique et Marrucini, quos, si Vestinus 5 attingeretur, omnes habendos hostes. Vicit tamen pars quae in praesentia videri potuit maioris animi quam consilii; sed eventus docuit fortis fortunam 6 iuvare. Bellum ex auctoritate patrum populus adversus Vestinos iussit. Provincia ea Bruto, Samnium

¹ non nova (or nota) Duker: noua Ω.

and that for money lent, the debtor's goods, but B.C. 326 not his person, should be distrainable. So those in confinement were released, and it was forbidden
that any should be confined thereafter.

XXIX. In that same year, though the Samnite B.C. 325 war and the sudden revolt of the Lucanians, together with the Tarentines their abettors, were enough of themselves to fill the senators with concern, yet the Vestini added to their cares by uniting with the Samnites. This action was widely discussed in private conversations, without being made the subject, in that year, of any public deliberations; but the consuls of the following year, Lucius Furius Camillus (for the second time) and Junius Brutus Scæva, deemed it a matter that should take precedence over all other business to come before the senate. There, notwithstanding it was no news to them, the situation occasioned the Fathers so great anxiety as to make them equally afraid to deal with it or to let it alone, lest the impunity of the Vestini might inspire the neighbouring tribes with licence and insolence, or a punitive war inflame them with apprehensions of imminent danger and with resentment; moreover the race as a whole was fully equal to the Samnites in military power, comprising, as it did, the Marsi, and the Paeligni and Marrucini,—all of whom must be had for enemies, should the Vestini be molested. The day, however,
was carried by that party which might have seemed at the moment to have on its side a greater share of courage than of wisdom; but the sequel showed that Fortune favours the brave. Being authorized by the senate, the people voted a war against the Vestini. This command was assigned by lot to 7 Camillo sorte evenit. Exercitus utroque ducti, et cura tuendorum finium hostes prohibiti coniungere 8 arma. Ceterum alterum consulem L. Furium, cui maior moles rerum imposita erat, morbo gravi im-9 plicitum fortuna bello subtraxit: iussusque dictatorem dicere rei gerendae causa, longe clarissimum bello ea tempestate dixit, L. Papirium Cursorem, a quo Q.¹ Fabius Maximus Rullianus² magister 10 equitum est dictus, par nobile rebus in eo magistratu gestis, discordia tamen, qua prope ad ultimum dimicationis ventum est, nobilius.

11 Ab altero consule in Vestinis multiplex bellum nec usquam vario eventu gestum est. Nam et pervastavit agros et populando atque urendo tecta 12 hostium sataque in aciem invitatos extraxit, et ita proelio uno accidit Vestinorum res, haudquaquam
 tamen incruento milite suo, ut non in castra solum refugerent hostes, sed iam ne vallo quidem ac fossis
 freti dilaberentur in oppida, situ urbium moeni-13 busque se defensuri. Postremo oppida quoque vi expugnare adortus, primo Cutinam ingenti ardore
 militum a volnerum ira,³ quod haud fere quisquam
 integer proelio excesserat, scalis cepit, deinde 14 Cingilam. Utriusque urbis praedam militibus, quod

¹ a quo Q. I²F³T²: a quo que (or a quoq.) Ω: amquoq. M:
 a quo D^x: abeoquo A².

² Rullianus Sigan. (C.I.L. i², p. 45, a.u.c. 432, 445; Plin. N.H. vii. xli. 42 : rutilanus O: rutilianus MPFUHT: rutilianus DLA).

³ a vol. vul- nerum ira Madrig (cf. xxiv. xxx. 1): aut vol (uul- nerum ira Ω: ac uulnerum ira Σ: aut uulneratum ira M).

¹ Since the Vestini were not supported by their neighbours, as men had feared they would be.

² Also called Rullus (xxiv. ix. 8). He was the grandfather of Fabius Cunctator, who opposed Hannibal.

Brutus, that against the Samnites to Camillus. Armies were dispatched in both directions, and the enemy, concerned to protect their borders, were kept from joining forces. But one of the consuls, Lucius Furius, on whom the heavier burden had been laid,¹ had the misfortune to fall dangerously ill and was compelled to relinquish his command; being ordered to nominate a dictator for the purpose of carrying on the war, he named by far the most distinguished soldier of that time, Lucius Papirius Cursor, by whom Quintus Fabius Maximus Rullianus² was appointed master of the horse. They were a pair famous for the victories won while they were magistrates; but their quarrelling, which almost went the length of a mortal feud, made them more famous still.

The other consul, in the country of the Vestini, carried on a war of many phases, but of unvarying success at every point. For he ravaged their farms, and by pillaging and burning their houses and their crops, compelled them against their will to take the field; and then in a single battle wrought such havoc with the Vestinian power—though his own troops came off by no means scatheless—that the enemy not only retreated to their camp, but, no longer trusting to their parapet and trenches, slipped away to their several towns, seeking protection in the situation of the places and their walls. Finally, the consul addressed himself to the capture of these towns. The soldiers fought with great fury to revenge their wounds, for hardly a man had come unhurt out of the battle; and first Cutina was carried by escalade, and then Cingilia. The consul gave the booty of both these cities to his men, eos neque portae nec muri hostium arcuerant, concessit.

XXX. In Samnium incertis itum auspiciis est; cuius rei vitium non in belli eventum, quod prospere gestum est, sed in rabiem atque iras imperatorum 2 vertit. Namque Papirius dictator a pullario monitus, cum ad auspicium repetendum Romam proficisetur, magistro equitum denuntiavit ut sese loco teneret, neu absente se cum hoste manum conse- 3 reret. Q.¹ Fabius cum post profectionem dictatoris per exploratores comperisset perinde omnia soluta apud hostes esse ac si nemo Romanus in Samnio 4 esset, seu ferox adulescens indignitate accensus, quod omnia in dictatore viderentur reposita esse, seu occasione bene gerendae rei inductus, exercitu instructo paratoque profectus ad Imbrinium—ita 5 vocant locum—acie cum Samnitibus confixit. Ea fortuna pugnae fuit ut nihil relictum sit quo, si adfuisset dictator, res melius geri potuerit; non dux 6 militi, non miles duci defuit; eques etiam auctore L. Cominio tribuno militum, qui aliquotiens impetu capto perrumpere non poterat² hostium agmen,³ detraxit frenos equis, atque ita concitatos calcaribus permisit ut sustinere eos nulla vis posset; per 7 arma, per viros late stragem dedere; secutus pedes impetum equitum turbatis hostibus intulit signa.

¹ Q. A² or A¹: que M: omitted by Ω.

² poterat Ω: potuerat Weissenborn.

³ agmen Ω: aciem Weissenborn (but cf., with Walters and Conway, Hor. Carm. IV. xiv. 29 and III. ii. 9).

because neither the gates nor the walls of the enemy had held them back.

XXX. The expedition into Samnium was attended with ambiguous auspices; but the flaw in them took effect, not in the outcome of the war, which was waged successfully, but in the animosities and madness of the generals. For Papirius, the dictator, as he was setting out for Rome, on the advice of the keeper of the sacred chickens, to take the auspices afresh, warned the master of the horse to remain in his position, and not to engage in battle with the enemy while he himself was absent. When Quintus Fabius had ascertained from his scouts—after the departure of the dictator—that the enemy were in all respects as careless and unguarded as if there had been not a single Roman in Samnium, whether it was that the spirited young man felt aggrieved that all power should seem to be vested in the dictator, or that he was tempted by the opportunity of striking a successful blow, he put the army in fighting trim, and advancing upon a place they call Imbrinium, engaged in a pitched battle with the Samnites. This engagement was so fortunate that no greater success could have been gained, had the dictator been present; the general failed not his men, nor the men their general. The cavalry, too—at the suggestion of Lucius Cominius, a tribune of the soldiers—after charging a number of times without being able to break the enemy's lines, pulled the bridles off their horses and spurred them on so hotly that nothing could resist the shock, and arms and men went down before them over a wide front. The foot-soldiers, following up the cavalry charge, advanced on the disordered enemy, Viginti milia hostium caesa eo die traduntur. Auctores habeo bis cum hoste signa conlata dictatore absente, bis rem egregie gestam; apud antiquissimos scriptores una haec pugna invenitur; in quibusdam annalibus tota res praetermissa est.

8 Magister equitum, ut ex tanta caede multis potitus spoliis, congesta in ingentem acervum hostilia arma subdito igne concremavit, seu votum id deorum cuiquam fuit, seu credere libet Fabio auctori eo factum, ne suae gloriae fructum dictator caperet nomenque ibi scriberet aut spolia in triumpho ferret.

9 Litterae quoque de re prospere gesta ad senatum, non ad dictatorem, missae argumentum fuere minime cum eo communicantis laudes. Ita certe dictator id factum accepit, ut laetis aliis victoria parta prae se ferret iram tristitiamque. Misso itaque repente senatu se ex curia proripuit, tum vero non Samnitium magis legiones quam maiestatem dictatoriam et disciplinam militarem a magistro equitum victam et eversam dictitans, si illi impune spretum imperium of whom it is said that twenty thousand were slain that day. I find it stated by certain writers that Quintus Fabius twice fought the enemy while the dictator was absent, and twice gained a brilliant victory. The oldest historians give but this one battle, and in certain annals the story is omitted altogether.

10 fuisse. Itaque plenus minarum iraeque profectus in castra, cum maximis itineribusisset, non tamen

11 praevenire famam adventus sui potuit; praecucurserant enim ab urbe qui nuntiarent dictatorem

12

The master of the horse found himself, after so great a slaughter, in possession of extensive spoils. He piled the enemy's arms in a great heap, applied a torch to them, and burnt them. This may have been done in fulfilment of a vow to one of the gods, or—if one chooses to accept the account of Fabius—to prevent the dictator reaping the harvest of his glory and inscribing his name on the arms, or having them carried in his triumph. A dispatch, too, reporting the victory, which Fabius sent to the senate and not to the dictator, argues that he had no mind to share the credit with him. At all events, the dictator so received the news, that while everyone else was rejoicing at the victory, he showed no uncertain signs of anger and discontent. And so, having hastily dismissed the senate, he rushed out of the Curia, repeatedly asserting that in that battle the master of the horse had defeated and overthrown the prestige of the dictatorship and military discipline not less decisively than the Samnite legions, should it end in his having flouted orders with impunity. And so he set out for the camp, breathing wrath and menaces; but though he travelled by exceedingly long stages, he was unable to arrive before the report of his being on the way. For couriers had hastened from the City, bringing word that the dictator was coming, athirst avidum poenae venire, alternis paene verbis T.

Manli factum laudantem.

XXXI. Fabius contione extemplo advocata obtestatus milites est ut, qua virtute rem publicam ab infestissimis hostibus defendissent, eadem se, cuius ductu auspicioque vicissent, ab impotenti 2 crudelitate dictatoris tutarentur: venire amentem invidia, iratum virtuti alienae felicitatique; furere quod se absente res publica egregie gesta esset; malle, si mutare fortunam posset, apud Samnites 3 quam Romanos victoriam esse; imperium dictitare spretum, tamquam non eadem mente pugnari vetuerit qua pugnatum doleat. Et tunc invidia impedire virtutem alienam voluisse cupidissimisque arma ablaturum fuisse militibus, ne se absente 4 moveri possent: et nunc¹ id furere, id aegre pati, quod sine L. Papirio non inermes, non manci milites fuerint, quod se Q. Fabius magistrum equitum 5 duxerit ac non accensum dictatoris. Quid illum facturum fuisse, si, quod belli casus ferunt Marsque communis, adversa pugna evenisset, qui sibi devictis hostibus, re publica bene gesta, ita ut non ab illo unico duce melius geri potuerit, supplicium magistro 6 equitum tunc victori minetur? Neque illum magi-

¹ nūc Ω: tunc M.

¹ See chapter vii.

for vengeance and praising with almost every other word the deed of Titus Manlius.¹

XXXI. Fabius at once convened an assembly of the soldiers, and reminding them how their bravery had saved the state from the most determined of enemies, conjured them to be no less brave in defending him—under whose command and auspices they had gained the victory—from the ungovernable wrath of the dictator. He was coming, said Fabius, crazed with jealousy, and exasperated that another should have been both brave and fortunate; it enraged him that the state should have won a glorious victory in his absence; he would prefer—could he effect a change of fortune—that the Samnites and not the Romans had been the victors; he repeatedly declared that his authority had been despised, as though his orders against fighting had not been inspired by the same motive as was his grief over the battle! On the former occasion envy had made him wish to thwart the bravery of others; he would have stripped the most willing of soldiers of their arms, that they might be unable to use them in his absence. At present his rage and resentment were due to this, that his troops, though lacking the help of Lucius Papirius, had lacked neither swords nor hands to wield them, and that Quintus Fabius had regarded himself as master of the horse, and not as the dictator's orderly. What would he have done, had the chances of war and the common lot of armies resulted in defeat? Despite the conquest of the enemy and a campaign so well directed that not even his own peerless leadership could have bettered it, he was now threatening the master of the horse with punishment, victorious though he was. For that stro equitum infestiores¹ quam tribunis militum, quam centurionibus, quam militibus esse. Si posset, 7 in omnes saevitum fuisse: quia id nequeat, in unum saevire; etenim² invidiam tamquam ignem summa petere; in caput consilii, in ducem incur-rere; si se simul cum gloria rei gestae extinxisset,

 tunc victorem velut in capto exercitu dominantem,
 quidquid licuerit in magistro equitum, in militibus
 8 ausurum. Proinde adessent in sua causa omnium libertati. Si consensum exercitus eundem qui in proelio fuerit in tuenda Victoria videat et salutem
 unius omnibus curae esse, inclinaturum ad clemen-9 tiorem sententiam animum. Postremo se vitam fortunasque suas illorum fidei virtutique permettere.

XXXII. Clamor e tota contione ortus, uti bonum animum haberet: neminem illi vim allaturum salvis legionibus Romanis.

Haud multo post dictator advenit classicoque
 2 extemplo ad contionem advocavit. Tum silentio facto praeco Q. Fabium magistrum equitum citavit.
 Qui simul ex inferiore loco ad tribunal accessit, tum 3 dictator "Quaero" inquit, "de te, Q. Fabi, cum summum imperium dictatoris sit pareantque ei consules, regia potestas, praetores, iisdem³ auspiciis

¹ tunc victori minetur? Neque illum magistro equitum infestiores O (but with a stop after victori): et tunc victori minetur? neque illum magistro equitum infestiores edd. before Gronov.: tunc victorem velut in capto exercitu infestiores MPFU: minetur minutetur H: neque illum magistro equitum infestiores HTDLA.

² etenim Eoot: etiam (et iam A) z.

³ iisdem A^x: isdem HT²: hisdem MPFT is de D^oL: wanting in O: illegible in A.

¹ cf. II. i. 8. All the rights of the kings and all their insignia were possessed by the earliest consuls.

matter, he was no angrier with the master of the horse than with the tribunes of the soldiers, the centurions, and the men. Had he been able, he would have vented his rage upon them all: this being impossible, he was pouring it out on one. The truth is that envy, like lightning, seeks out the highest places; he was hurling himself upon the head of their counsels, upon their general; should he succeed in destroying Fabius, and with him the glory of their achievement, he would then follow up his victory—as though lording it over a captured army—and would visit upon the soldiers all the cruelty he had been permitted to inflict upon the master of the horse. Let them defend, he cried, the liberty of all by defending him. If that same singleness of purpose which the army had displayed in battle should appear in the way they stood up for their victory and made one man's safety the safety of them all, the dictator would incline his heart to a more merciful determination. He ended by committing himself, his life, and his fortunes to their loyalty and valour.

XXXII. A shout arose from the whole concourse, bidding him be of good courage; no one, they cried, should do him violence, while the Roman legions were safe.

Not long after came the dictator, and forthwith by sound of trumpet summoned an assembly. Then a herald, having obtained silence, cited Quintus Fabius the master of the horse, who was no sooner come up from below to the tribunal, than the dictator cried out: “I ask you, Quintus Fabius, seeing that the dictator's authority is paramount, and the consuls obey him, though they possess the might of kings,¹ and the praetors, too, who have been elected under

A.U.C.
429 quibus consules creati, aequum censeas neene, ei¹
 4 magistrum equitum dicto audientem esse; itemque
 illud interrogo, cum me incertis auspiciis profectum
 ab domo scirem, utrum mihi turbatis religionibus res publica in disserimen committenda fuerit an auspicia repetenda, ne quid dubiis dis agerem?
 5 Simul illud, quae dictatori religio impedimento ad
 rem gerendam fuerit, num ea magister equitum solutus ac liber potuerit esse? Sed quid ego haec interrogo, cum, si ego tacitus abissem, tamen tibi
 ad voluntatis interpretationem meae dirigenda tua 6 sententia fuerit? Quin tu respondes, vetuerimne te quicquam rei me absente agere, vetuerimne signa 7 cum hostibus conferre? Quo tu imperio meo spreto, incertis auspiciis, turbatis religionibus adversus mo-
 rem militarem disciplinamque maiorum et numen 8 deorum ausus es cum hoste configere. Ad haec quae interrogatus es responde; at² extra ea cave vocem mittas.³ Accede, lictor."

9 Adversus singula cum respondere haud facile esset, et nunc quereretur eundem accusatorem capitis sui
 ac iudicem esse, modo vitam sibi eripi citius quam 10 gloriam rerum gestarum posse vociferaretur purgaretque se in vicem atque ultro accusaret, tunc⁴
 Papirius redintegrata ira spoliari magistrum equitum 11 ac virgas et secures expediri iussit. Fabius fidem

¹ necne ei Madrig: necne Ω.

² responde; at F^x: respondeat Ω: responde A³.

³ uocem mittas A² (or A¹) ζ: uocem emittas F³ (-itas) A³ (or A²): uocem mittat Ω: uoce mittat M: uox nece mittat² (i.e. mittatur) H: uocem mittatur T (or T¹) L³A (or A¹): uoce mittatur DL (and TA²).

⁴ tunc Ω: tum L Madrig.

the same auspices with the consuls, whether or no you deem it to be reasonable that the master of the horse should hearken to his word; and I put this further question to you—whether, when I knew that I had set out from home with uncertain auspices, it was my duty, in view of our troubled relations with the gods, to jeopardize the public safety, or to seek auspices again, that I might take no steps while the will of Heaven was in doubt; and I likewise ask whether that which a religious scruple has prevented the dictator from doing can be freely and unrestrainedly undertaken by the master of the horse. But why do I put these questions, since, had I gone off without a word, nevertheless your thoughts should have been directed to the interpretation of my will? Come, answer me: Did I forbid you to take any measures in my absence? Did I forbid you to engage the enemy? But you spurned this order: and notwithstanding the uncertainty of the auspices and our uneasy scruples, you had the hardihood, against all military precedent, and the discipline of our fathers, and the divine will of the gods, to encounter with the enemy. Answer these questions I have put to you; but have a care that you utter no word besides 'Stand ready, lictor.'

To answer the separate indictments was far from easy. Now complaining that the same man was his accuser and his judge in a matter of life and death, and again crying out that he could more easily be robbed of his life than of the glory of his deeds, he defended himself and accused the general by turns, until Papirius in a fresh burst of anger bade them strip the master of the horse and make ready rods and axes. Then Fabius, imploring the protection of militum implorans lacerantibus vestem lictoribus ad triarios tumultum ultima¹ in contione miscentes sese recepit.

12 Inde clamor in totam contionem est perlatus; alibi preces, alibi minae audiebantur. Qui proximi forte tribunal steterant, quia subiecti oculis imperatoris noscitari poterant, orabant ut parceret magistro equitum, neu cum eo exercitum damnaret; 13 extrema contio et circa Fabium globus increpabant inclementem dictatorem nec procul seditione aberrant. Ne tribunal quidem satis quietum erat; 14 legati circumstantes sellam orabant ut rem in posterum diem differret et irae suae spatium et con- 15 silio tempus daret: satis castigatam adulescentiam Fabi esse, satis deformatam victoram; ne ad extremum finem supplicii tenderet, neu unico iuveni neu patri eius, clarissimo viro, neu Fabiae genti eam 16 iniungeret ignominiam. Cum parum preeibus, parum causa proficerent, intueri saevientem contionem iubebant: ita irritatis militum animis subdere ignem ac materiam seditioni non esse aetatis, non prudentiae 17 eius; neminem id Q. Fabio poenam deprecanti suam vitio versurum, sed dictatori, si occaecatus ira infestam multitudinem in se pravo certamine mo- 18 visset. Postremo, ne id se gratiae dare Q. Fabi

¹ ultima Wesenberg: iam Ω.

¹ For an assembly the soldiers stood in maniples, drawn up in the same order as for a battle. See chapter viii.

the soldiers, escaped from the clutches of the lictors B.C. 325 with his clothes in tatters, and sought refuge in the midst of the triarii, who were stirring up riot in the rear of the assembly.¹

Thence the outcry spread to the entire host. In one place were heard entreaties, in another threats. Those who chanced to be standing next to the tribunal, and being under the general's eyes were able to be marked by him, implored him to spare the master of the horse, and not condemn the army with him. Those in the outskirts of the meeting, and the crowd that surrounded Fabius, railed at the dictator's cruelty, and were near to mutiny. Not even the tribunal itself was quiet; the lieutenants, standing about the dictator's chair, besought him to put the matter off until the morrow and allow time for consideration and for his anger to cool; he had sufficiently chastened the youth of Fabius, they said, and discredited his victory; it would not be well to carry out his punishment to the end, nor to fasten such humiliation upon a young man of extraordinary merit, nor on that most distinguished man, his father, and the Fabian family. Finding that neither prayers nor arguments did any good, they bade him look at the turmoil in the assembly; when the passions of the soldiers were so overwrought, it was not, they said, for one of his years and discretion to furnish fuel to the flames of mutiny; no one would ascribe the fault to Quintus Fabius—who was but deprecating his own punishment—but all would blame the dictator, if, blinded with resentment, he should bring down the angry multitude upon himself by an ill-judged contention. Finally, that he might not suppose that they argued thus out of any crederet, se ius iurandum dare paratos esse non videri e re publica in Q. Fabium eo tempore animadverti.

XXXIII. His vocibus cum in se magis incitarent dictatorem quam magistro equitum placarent, iussi de tribunali descendere legati; et silentio nequam per praecomenem temptato, cum prae¹ strepitum ac tumultu nec ipsius dictatoris nec apparitorum eius vox audiretur, nox velut in proelio certamini finem fecit.

3 Magister equitum, iussus postero die adesse, cum omnes adfirmarent infestius Papirium exarsurum, agitatum contentione² ipsa exacerbatumque, clam 4 ex castris Romam profugit; et patre auctore M. Fabio, qui ter iam consul dictatorque fuerat, vocato extemplo senatu, cum maxime conquereretur apud patres vim atque iniuriam dictatoris, repente strepitus 5 ante curiam lictorum summoventium auditur, et ipse infensus aderat, postquam comperit profectum ex castris, cum expedito equitatu secutus. Iterata deinde contentio, et preendi Fabium Papirius iussit. 6 Ubi cum deprecantibus primoribus patrum atque universo senatu perstaret in incepto immitis animus, personal regard for Fabius, they were ready, they said, to take an oath that it appeared to be inconsistent with the interests of the state that Quintus Fabius should then be punished.

¹ cum prae T²A³ (or A²) Σ : prae Ω.

² contentione Σ : contione F³ (or F²) over erasure : conuentione Ω.

¹ It was not until 216 B.C. that the senate was a second time convened by a master of the horse (XXIII. xxv. 3).

XXXIII. But the lieutenants by these words rather stirred up the wrath of the dictator against themselves than lessened his rancour against the master of the horse, and he ordered them to go down from the tribunal. He then sought by the mouth of a herald to procure silence, but without success, for the din and uproar were so great that it was impossible for the dictator himself or his attendants to be heard ; and it was left for darkness, as though descending on a battle-field, to end the struggle.

The master of the horse was commanded to appear next day ; but since everyone assured him that Papirius would be more violent than ever, aroused as he was and exasperated by the opposition he had met with, he slipped out of the camp and fled to Rome. There, with the approval of his father, who had thrice been consul, and dictator to boot, he at once assembled the senate,¹ and had reached, in his speech to the senators, the very point where he was complaining of the violence and injury offered him by the dictator, when a sudden noise was heard outside the Curia, as the lictors cleared the way, and Papirius himself, in high dudgeon, appeared before them ; for he had learned of the other's departure from the camp, and taking a troop of light horse had pursued him. The dispute was now renewed, and the dictator ordered Fabius to be seized. Both the leading members and the senate as a body sought to pacify his wrath ; but he would not relent, and persisted in his pur-

7 tum pater M. Fabius "Quando quidem" inquit,
 "apud te nec auctoritas senatus nec aetas mea, cui
 orbitatem paras, nec virtus nobilitasque magistri equitum a te ipso nominati valet nec preces, quae
 saepe hostem mitigavere, quae deorum iras placant, tribunos plebis appello et provoco ad populum eum-8 que tibi, fugienti exercitus tui, fugienti senatus iudicium, iudicem fero, qui certe unus plus quam tua dictatura potest polletque. Videro, cessurusne provocationi sis, cui rex Romanus Tullus Hostilius cessit."

9 Ex curia in contionem itur. Quo cum paucis dictator, cum omni agmine principum magister
 equitum cum escendisset,¹ deduci eum de rostris
 10 Papirius in partem inferiorem iussit. Secutus pater
 "Bene agis" inquit, "cum eo nos deduci iussisti, unde et privati vocem mittere possemus." Ibi primo non tam perpetuae orationes quam altercatio exaudie-11 batur²; vicit deinde strepitum vox et indignatio
 Fabi senis increpantis superbiam crudelitatemque 12 Papiri: se quoque dictatorem Romae fuisse, nec a se quemquam, ne plebis quidem hominem, non 13 centurionem, non militem violatum; Papirium tamquam ex hostium ducibus, sic ex Romano imperatore

¹ cum escendisset, scilicet: escendisset MPOHT: ascendisset M⁴P²FUDLA.

² exaudiebatur Gronov.: exaudiebantur A.

¹ See Book I., chap. xxvi.

pose. Then the father of the young man said :— “ Inasmuch as neither the senate’s authority nor my old age—which you are going about to bereave
 —nor the merits and noble lineage of a master of the horse whom you yourself appointed, are of any weight with you, nor yet entreaties, which have often moved an enemy to mercy, which can persuade the gods to put away their anger,—I invoke the tribunes of the plebs, and appeal to the people ; and since you would shun the judgment of your own army and shun the judgment of the senate, I propose to you a judge that singly has more might and power—be well assured—than has your dictatorship.
 We shall see whether you will submit to an appeal to which a Roman king, Tullus Hostilius, submitted ! ”¹

Leaving the senate-house, they repaired to the speaker’s platform, which the dictator mounted with only a few attendants, while the master of the horse was accompanied thither by the whole body of the leading men. Then Papirius bade Fabius be removed from the Rostra to the ground below ; and his father followed him, exclaiming, “ You do well to bid us be removed to a place where even as private citizens we can say our say ! ” At first there were not so much set speeches to be heard above the tumult as an interchange of angry words. But presently the strong voice and the indignation of the elder Fabius prevailed over the din, as he inveighed against the pride and cruelty of Papirius. He reminded him that he too had been dictator at Rome, and that no man—not even a plebeian, a centurion, or a common soldier—had been misused by him ; but Papirius was seeking a victory and triumph over a Roman general, as if over com-victoriam et triumphum petere. Quantum interesse¹ inter moderationem antiquorum et novam superbiam crudelitatemque!¹ Dictatorem Quintum Cincin-natum in L. Minucium consulem ex obsidione a se ereptum non ultra saevisse quam ut legatum eum

 ad exercitum pro consule relinqueret. M. Furium Camillum in L. Furio, qui contempta sua senectute et auctoritate foedissimo cum eventu pugnasset, non solum in praesentia moderatum irae esse, ne quid
 de collega secus populo aut senatu scriberet, sed
 cum revertisset, potissimum ex tribunis consularibus habuisse quem ex collegis optione ab senatu data socium sibi imperii deligeret. Nam populi quidem, penes quem potestas omnium rerum esset, ne iram
 quidem unquam atrociorem fuisse in eos qui temeritate atque inscitia exercitus amisissent quam ut pecunia eos multaret: capite anquisitum ob rem bello male gestam de imperatore nullo² ad eam diem esse. Nunc ducibus populi Romani, quae ne vietis quidem bello fas fuerit, virgas et secures vitoribus et iustissimos meritis triumphos intentari.
 Quid enim tandem passurum fuisse filium suum, si
 exercitum amisisset, si fusus, fugatus, castris exutus fuisset? Quo ultra irami violentiamque eius excess-suram fuisse, quam ut verberaret necaretque? Quam conveniens esse, propter Q. Fabium civitatem in

¹ interesse Gronov.: interesset /-ent? F Ω: interest L

² nullo A Σ: nullum nulum T Ω: nullam M.

¹ The story is related at length, III. xxvi.-xxix.

² See VI. xxii.-xxv.

manders of the enemy. How great was the difference betwixt the moderation of the ancients and this new-fangled arrogance and ruthlessness! When Quinctius Cincinnatus had been dictator, and had rescued the consul Lucius Minucius from the toils of the enemy, his anger had gone no further than to leave Minucius in command of the army as his lieutenant, in place of being consul.¹ Marcus Furius Camillus, when Lucius Furius, in contempt of his great age and his authority, had fought a battle, with the direst results, not only controlled his indignation at the moment and made no animadversions upon his colleague in writing to the senate or the people, but, on being permitted by the senate, after his return, to choose a partner in command, selected Lucius Furius in preference to all the other consular tribunes, his associates.² As to the people, who had all power in their hands, their indignation against those who by recklessness or lack of skill had lost their armies had never burned so fiercely that they punished them with anything worse than a fine; a capital charge on account of a defeat had never until that day been lodged against a general. But now the generals of the Roman People, who even if beaten might not be so dealt with without sin, were, despite their victories and their well-earned title to a triumph, being threatened with scourging and decapitation. What, pray, would his son have suffered, if he had lost his army, if he had been discomfited, routed, and driven from his camp? To what higher pitch could the passionate violence of Papirius have mounted than to scourge him and put him to death? How proper it was that because of Quintus Fabius the citizens

- laetitia victoria supplicationibus ac gratulationibus 21 esse, eum propter quem deum delubra pateant, arae sacrificiis fument, honore donis cumulentur, nudatum
 virgis lacerari in conspectu populi Romani, intuentem Capitolium atque arcem deosque ab se duobus proeliis 22 haud frustra advocatos! Quo id animo exercitum, qui eius ductu auspiciisque vicisset, laturum? Quem luctum in castris Romanis, quam laetitiam inter hostes fore!
 23 Haec simul iurgans, querens, deum hominumque fidem obtestans et complexus filium, plurimis cum lacrimis agebat.

XXXIV. Stabat cum eo senatus maiestas, favor populi, tribunicium auxilium, memoria absentis exer-
 2 citus; ex parte altera imperium invictum populi Romani et disciplina rei militaris et dictatoris edictum pro numine semper observatum et Manliana imperia et posthabita filii caritas publicae utilitati iactabantur:
 3 hoc etiam L. Brutum, conditorem Romanae libertatis, antea in duobus liberis fecisse; nunc patres comes et senes faciles de alieno imperio spreto, tamquam
 rei parvae, disciplinae militaris eversae iuventuti 4 gratiam facere. Se tamen perstaturum in incepto, nec ei qui adversus dictum suum turbatis religionibus
 ac dubiis auspiciis pugnasset quicquam ex iusta poena

¹ Chap. vii. § 22.

² II. v. 5.

should exult in victory with thanksgivings and rejoicings; while he on whose account the shrines of the gods were open, and the altars smoked with sacrifices and were heaped high with incense and with offerings, should be stripped and mangled with rods in full sight of the Roman People, as he looked up to the Capitol and the Citadel and the gods whose help in battle he had twice invoked, and not in vain! In what spirit would this be taken by the army, which under his conduct and his auspices had gained the victory? What grief would there be in the Roman camp, what rejoicings amongst their enemies!

So he made his plea, now chiding and now complaining, now calling on gods and men to help him, now bursting into tears, as he embraced his son.

XXXIV. On his side were ranged the countenance of the senate, the favour of the populace, the assistance of the tribunes, the remembrance of the absent army. His opponent urged the invincible authority of the Roman People, and military discipline, and the edict of a dictator—which had ever been revered as the will of Heaven—and the severity of Manlius,¹ who had preferred the general good to the love he bore his son, even as Lucius Brutus,² the founder of Roman liberty, had done before, in the case of his two children. But nowadays—the dictator proceeded—fathers were indulgent; and the older generation, little caring if another man's authority were flouted, excused the young for overturning military discipline, as a thing of no importance. He should nevertheless persist in his undertaking, nor remit an iota of his due punishment to one who had fought against his orders, while the rites of religion were confused and the 5 remissurum. Maiestas imperii perpetuane esset non 6 esse in sua potestate: L. Papirium nihil de eius iure¹ deminuturum²; optare ne potestas tribunicia, inviolata ipsa, violet intercessione sua Romanum

 imperium, neu populus in se potissimum dictatore 7 vim et ius³ dictatura exstinguat. Quod si fecisset, non L. Papirium sed tribunos, sed pravum populi iudicium neququam posteros accusaturos, cum polluta semel militari disciplina non miles centurionis, non centurio tribuni, non tribunus legati, non legatus consulis, non magister equitum dictatoris pareat 8 imperio, nemo hominum, nemo deorum verecundiam habeat, non edicta imperatorum, non auspicia obser-ventur, sine commeatu vagi milites in pacato, in 9 hostico errant,⁴ immemores sacramenti licentia sua
 10 se⁵ ubi velint exauctorent, infrequentia deserantur signa neque conveniatur ad edictum nec discernatur interdiu nocte, aequo iniquo loco, iussu iniussu⁶
 imperatoris pugnant, et non signa, non ordines
 servent, latrocini modo caeca et fortuita pro sollemni 11 et sacrata militia sit;—“Horum criminum vos reos
 in omnia saecula offerte, tribuni plebi, vestra obnoxia capita pro licentia Q. Fabi obcite.”

¹ nihil de eius iure ζ : nihil eius iure Ω : nihil eius
MHTDLA ζ .

² deminuturum ζ : diminuturum Ω : diminutum A³M.

³ dictatore vim et ius Kreyssig: dictatorem ius ζ : dictatorem et ius Ω : dictatore ius Duker: dictatore et ius H. J.
Mueller (and P?).

⁴ errant F³A²: errarent Ω .

⁵ sua se Walters and Conway: sola uase HTDLA: sola se MA² Gelenius: sola PFUT²: lacuna between sacramenti and uelint O: sola sua se Alschejski: soluta se Madrig: sola qua se L³.

⁶ iussu iniussu Gelenius ζ : iniussu Ω .

auspices uncertain. Whether the majesty of the supreme authority were to endure or not was beyond his power to determine; but Lucius Papirius would do nothing to diminish it. He prayed that the tribunes might not employ their power—itself inviolate—to violate by their interference the authority of Rome; that the people might not single out the very time of his holding that office to extinguish the lawful might of the dictatorship. Should they do so, it would not be Lucius Papirius, but the tribunes and the crooked judgment of the people, that posterity would censure, and censure without avail. For let military discipline be once broken, and soldier would not obey centurion, nor centurion tribune, nor tribune lieutenant, nor lieutenant consul, nor master of the horse dictator—none would have respect for men, none reverence for the gods; neither edicts of generals nor auspices would be regarded; the soldiers, without leave, would roam in hostile as in peaceful territory; with no thought of their oath they would quit the service by their own permission, when they pleased; the standards would be deserted, the men would not come together at command; they would fight without reference to night or day, to the advantage or disadvantage of the ground, to the orders or prohibition of the general; they would neither wait for the word nor keep to their ranks; blind and haphazard brigandage would supplant the time-honoured and hallowed ways of war.—“On such charges, tribunes of the plebs, expose yourselves to be arraigned through all the ages! Let your own heads bear the guilt of the licence of Quintus Fabius!”

XXXV. Stupentes tribunos et suam iam vicem magis anxios quam eius cui auxilium ab se petebatur, liberavit onere consensus populi Romani, ad preces
 et obtestationem versus, ut sibi poenam magistri
 2 equitum dictator remitteret. Tribuni quoque incli-natam rem in preces subsecuti orare dictatorem insistunt ut veniam errori humano, veniam adul-scentiae Q. Fabi daret; satis eum poenarum dedisse.
 3 Iam ipse adulescens, iam pater M. Fabius, contentionis oblii procumbere ad genua et iram deprecari dicta-4 toris. Tum dictator silentio facto "Bene habet" inquit, "Quirites. Vicit disciplina militaris, vicit imperii maiestas, quae in discriminé fuerunt an ulla
 5 post hanc diem essent. Non noxae eximitur Q.
 Fabius, qui contra edictum imperatoris pugnavit,
 sed noxae damnatus donatur populo Romano, donatur
 tribuniciae potestati precarium non iustum auxilium 6 ferenti. Vive, Q. Fabi, felicior hoc consensu civitatis ad tuendum te quam qua paulo ante exsultabas
 victoria; vive, id facinus ausus cuius tibi ne parens quidem, si eodem loco fuisset quo fuit L. Papirius, 7 veniam dedisset. Mecum, ut voles, reverteris in gratiam; populo Romano, cui vitam debes, nihil maius praestiteris quam si hic tibi dies satis docu-menti dederit ut bello ac pace pati legitima imperia

XXXV. The tribunes were dumbfounded, more troubled now on their own account than on his, for whom their help was being solicited; but the Roman People relieved them of their burden of responsibility, when they turned as one man to the dictator, and entreated and adjured him to remit for their sake the punishment of the master of the horse. The tribunes, too, fell in with the prevailing mood, and earnestly besought Papirius to allow for human frailty, to allow for the youth of Quintus Fabius, who had suffered punishment enough. Now the young man himself, now his father Marcus Fabius, forgetting all contention, threw themselves down at the dictator's knees and attempted to avert his anger. Then said the dictator, when silence was obtained, "It is well, Quirites. The discipline of war, the majesty of government, have got the victory, despite the danger that this day would see the end of them. Quintus Fabius is not found guiltless, seeing that he fought against the orders of his general; but, convicted of that guilt, is granted as a boon to the Roman People, is granted to the authority of the tribunes, who plead for him but can bring him no legal relief. Live, Quintus Fabius, more blest in this consent of your fellow citizens to save you, than in the victory over which, a little while ago, you were exulting! Live, though you dared a deed which not even your sire would have pardoned, had he been in the place of Lucius Papirius! With me you shall again be on good terms when you will; for the Roman People, to whom you owe your life, you can do nothing greater than to show that you have learned what this day clearly teaches—to submit in war and in peace

A.U.C.
429

8 possis." Cum se nihil morari magistrum equitum pronuntiasset, degressum¹ eum templo laetus senatus, laetior populus, circumfusi ac gratulantes hinc 9 magistro equitum, hinc dictatori, prosecuti sunt, firmatumque imperium militare haud minus periculo Q. Fabi quam suppicio miserabili adulescentis Manli videbatur.

10 Forte ita eo anno evenit ut quotienscumque dictator ab exercitu recessisset,² hostes in Samnio moverentur. Ceterum in oculis exemplum erat Q. Fabius M. Valerio legato, qui castris praeerat, ne quam vim hostium magis quam trucem dictatoris 11 iram timeret. Itaque frumentatores cum circumventi ex insidiis caesi loco iniquo essent, creditum volgo est subveniri eis ab legato potuisse, ni tristia edicta 12 exhorruisset. Ea quoque ira alienavit a dictatore militum animos, iam ante infenos, quod implacabilis Q. Fabio fuisse et, quod suis precibus negasset, eius populo Romano veniam dedisset.

XXXVI. Postquam dictator praeposito in urbe L. Papirio Crasso, magistro equitum Q. Fabio vetito quicquam pro magistratu agere, in castra rediit, 2 neque civibus satis laetus adventus eius fuit nec hostibus quicquam attulit terroris. Namque postero die, seu ignari venisse dictatorem seu adesset an to lawful authority." Then, declaring that the master of the horse was free to depart, he descended from the platform, and the joyful senators and yet more joyful people thronged about them and attended them, congratulating now the master of the horse and now the dictator. It seemed that the peril of Fabius had been not less efficacious than the pitiful punishment of young Manlius in the establishment of military authority.

¹ degressum Gronovius: digressum Ω.

² recessisset I³A³ (or A²) ; Muretus: recessit Ω.

It so fell out that year, that as often as the dictator left the army, there was a rising of the enemy in Samnium. But with the example of Quintus Fabius before his eyes, Marcus Valerius, the lieutenant who commanded in the camp, could not fear any violence of the enemy more than the dread displeasure of the dictator. And so when a party of foragers had fallen into an ambush and fighting at a disadvantage had been slain, it was commonly believed that the lieutenant might have rescued them, had he not quailed at the thought of those harsh orders. Their resentment of this still further estranged the soldiers from the dictator, angry as they already were at his unwillingness to pardon Quintus Fabius, and his having granted to the Roman People a boon he had denied to their own entreaties.

XXXVI. When the dictator had set Lucius Papirius Crassus over the City and had forbidden Quintus Fabius, the master of the horse, to exercise his magistracy in any way, he returned to the camp, where his arrival occasioned no great satisfaction to the Romans nor the slightest apprehension to their enemies. For on the following day, whether unaware that the dictator was come or caring little

L.C.
429

abesset parvi facientes, instructa acie ad castra
 3 accesserunt. Ceterum tantum momenti in uno viro
 L. Papirio fuit ut, si ducis consilia favor subsecutus militum foret, debellari eo die cum Samnitibus 4 potuisse pro haud dubio habitum sit; ita instruxit aciem, ita loco¹ ac subsidiis, ita omni arte bellica firmavit; cessatum a milite ac de industria, ut obtrectaretur laudibus ducis, impedita victoria est. Plures Samnitium cecidere, plures Romani vulnerati sunt.
 5 Sensit peritus dux quae res victoriae obstaret:
 temperandum ingenium suum esse et severitatem
 6 miscendam comitati. Itaque adhibitis legatis ipse circuit² saucios milites, inserens in tentoria caput, singulosque ut sese haberent rogitans curam eorum nominatim legatis tribunisque et praefectis de-7 mandabat. Rem per se popularem ita dextere³ egit ut medendis corporibus animi multo prius
 militum imperatori reconciliarentur, nec quicquam
 ad salubritatem efficacius fuerit quam quod grato 8 animo ea cura accepta est. Refecto exercitu cum hoste congressus, haud dubia spe sua militumque, ita
 fudit fugavitque Samnites, ut ille ultimus eis dies 9 conferendi signa cum dictatore fuerit. Incessit deinde qua duxit praedae spes victor exercitus per-

¹ ita loco Madrig: loco Ω.

² circuit Walters (cf. chap. xxxvii § 9): circū POHD: circum MFTLA: circumiens U.

³ dextere Frag. Harerk. ζ: dexter (or dext̄) Ω: sedulo F³ (over erasure).

whether he were there or not, the Samnites formed in order of battle and approached the camp. So great however was the importance of one man, Lucius Papirius, that if the goodwill of the soldiers had seconded the measures taken by their general, it was held as certain that the war with Samnium might that day have been brought to a successful termination—so skilfully did he dispose his army, so well secure it with every advantage of position and reserves, and with every military art. But the men were listless, and, on purpose to discredit their commander, threw away the victory. There were more Samnites killed, more Romans wounded. The experienced general perceived what stood in the way of his success: he must qualify his native disposition, and mingle geniality with his sternness. So, calling together his lieutenants, he made the round of his wounded soldiers in person, and putting his head into their tents and asking each how he was doing, he commended them by name to the care of the lieutenants, the tribunes, and the prefects. This of itself was a popular thing to do, and Papirius managed it with such tact, that in healing their bodies he gained their affections much more rapidly; and indeed there was nothing that more promoted their recovery than the pleasurable feelings with which they accepted these attentions. When the army was restored, he met the enemy, with no doubt as to the result, either on his own part or on that of his soldiers, and so routed and dispersed the Samnites that this was the last time they joined battle with the dictator. The victorious army then marched on where the prospect of booty beckoned them, and traversed the territories of the

A.U.C.
429 lustravitque hostium agros, nulla arma, nullam vim
10 nec apertam nec ex insidiis expertus. Addebat alacritatem quod dictator praedam omnem edixerat
militibus; nec ira magis publica quam privatum
11 compendium in hostem acuebat. His cladibus subacti Samnites pacem a dictatore petiere; cum quo pacti,
ut singula vestimenta militibus et annum stipen-12 dium darent, cum ire ad senatum iussi essent, secuturos se dictatorem responderunt, unius eius fidei virtutique causam suam commendantes. Ita deductus ex Samnitibus exercitus.

V.U.C.
0-431 XXXVII. Dictator triumphans urbem est ingressus: et cum se dictatura abdicare vellet, iussu patrum, priusquam abdicaret, consules creavit C. Sul-picio Longum iterum Q. Aemilium Cerretanum.
2 Samnites infecta pace, quia de condicionibus ambigebatur,¹ industias annuas ab urbe rettulerunt. Nec earum ipsarum sancta fides fuit; adeo, postquam Papirium abisse magistratu nuntiatum est, arresti ad
bellandum animi sunt.
3 C. Sulpicio Q. Aemilio—Aulium² quidam annales habent—consulibus ad defectionem Samnitium Apu-lum novum bellum accessit. Utroque exercitus missi. Sulpicio Samnites, Apuli Aemilio sorte 4 evenerunt. Sunt qui non ipsis Apulis bellum inlatum, sed socios eius gentis populos ab Samnitium
5 vi atque iniuriis defensos scribant; ceterum fortuna
Samnitium, vix a se ipsis eo tempore propulsantium

¹ ambigebatur Drakenborch: agebatur Ω.

² Aulium Gelenius and Sigonius: aulum Ω.

enemy without encountering any armed resistance B.C. 325
 whatsover, either face to face or from an ambush. The dictator had increased the alacrity of his troops by proclaiming that the booty should all be theirs, and private gain did as much as the public resentment to whet their zeal against the enemy. Discouraged by these reverses, the Samnites sought peace of Papirius, and agreed with him to give every soldier a garment and a year's pay. He directed them to go before the senate, but they replied that they would attend him thither, committing their cause wholly to his honour and integrity. So the army was withdrawn from Samnium.

XXXVII. The dictator, having entered the City B.C.
324-323 in triumph, would have laid down his office, but was commanded by the senate first to hold a consular election ; he announced that Gaius Sulpicius Longus had been chosen for the second time, together with Quintus Aemilius Cerretanus. The treaty was not completed, owing to a disagreement over terms, and the Samnites left the City with a truce for a year ; nor did they scrupulously hold even to that ; so encouraged were they to make war, on learning that Papirius had resigned.

In the consulship of Gaius Sulpicius and Quintus Aemilius—some annals have Aulius—the defection of the Samnites was followed by a new war with Apulia. Armies were sent out in both directions. The lots assigned the Samnites to Sulpicius, the Apulians to Aemilius. Some say that the war was not waged against the Apulians, but in defence of some of the allies of that people whom the Samnites had wantonly invaded ; but the circumstances of the Samnites, who at that time could hardly ward off bellum, proprius ut sit vero facit non Apulis ab Samnitibus arma inlata, sed cum utraque simul 6 gente bellum Romanis fuisse. Nec tamen res ulla memorabilis acta; ager Apulus Samnumque evastatum; hostes nec hic nec illic inventi.

Romae nocturnus terror ita ex somno trepidam repente civitatem excivit ut Capitolium atque arx 7 moeniaque et portae plena armatorum fuerint; et cum concursatum clamatumque ad arma omnibus locis esset, prima luce nec auctor nec causa terroris comparuit.

8 Eodem anno de Tusculanis Flavia rogatione populi fuit iudicium. M. Flavius¹ tribunus plebis tulit ad populum ut in Tusculanos animadverteretur, quod eorum² ope ac consilio Veltorni Privernatesque 9 populo Romano bellum fecissent. Populus Tusculanus cum coniugibus ac liberis Romam venit. Ea multitudo veste mutata et specie reorum tribus 10 circuit, genibus se omnium advolvens; plus itaque misericordia ad poenae veniam impetrandam quam 11 causa ad crimen purgandum valuit. Tribus omnes praeter Polliam antiquarunt legem. Polliae sententia fuit puberes verberatos necari, coniuges liberosque 12 sub corona lege belli venire. Memoriam eius irae Tusculanis in poenae tam atrocis auctores mansisse ad patrum aetatem constat, nec quemquam ferme ex Pollia tribu candidatum Papiriam ferre solitum.

¹ Flavius ♂: fabius Ω.

² quod eorum ♂: quō eorum ♂: quorum Α: quorum eorum Ω: quoniam eorum Α²♂.

¹ The Tusculans, upon gaining Roman citizenship, were enrolled in the Papirian tribe, and were so numerous as to control its vote.

invasion from themselves, render it more probable that they did not attack the Apulians but that they and the Apulians were at war with Rome simultaneously. There was, however, no memorable engagement. The Romans laid waste Apulia and Samnium, without encountering the enemy in either country.

At Rome a nocturnal alarm awoke the sleeping citizens with such a fright that Capitol and Citadel, walls and gates, were crowded with armed men; and after all the hurrying to posts and crying "to arms!" in every quarter, day broke and discovered neither author nor occasion of the panic.

In the same year, the Tusculans were tried before the people in accordance with the Flavian rogation. Marcus Flavius, a plebeian tribune, had proposed to the people that the Tusculans be punished for having lent their countenance and aid to the Veliterni and Privernates in their war with the Roman People. The citizens of Tusculum, with their wives and children, came to Rome; and the great throng, putting on the sordid raiment of defendants, went about amongst the tribes and clasped the knees of the citizens in supplication. And so it happened that pity was more effective in gaining them remission of their punishment than were their arguments in clearing away the charges. All the tribes rejected the proposal, save only the Pollian, which voted that the grown men should be scourged and put to death, and their wives and children sold at auction under the laws of war. It seems that the resentment engendered in the Tusculans by so cruel a proposal lasted down to our fathers' time, and that a candidate of the Pollian tribe almost never got the vote of the Papirian.¹

XXXVIII. Insequenti anno, Q. Fabio L. Fulvio consulibus, A. Cornelius Arvina dictator et M. Fabius Ambustus magister equitum metu gravioris in Samnio belli—conducta enim pretio a finitimis iuventus dicebatur—intentiore dilectu habito egregium exercitum adversus Samnites duxerunt. Castra in hostico incuriose ita posita tamquam procul abesset hostis, cum subito advenere Samnitium legiones tanta ferocia ut vallum usque ad stationem Romanam inferrent.

Nox iam appetebat; id prohibuit munimenta adoriri; nec dissimulabant orta luce postero die facturos.

Dictator ubi propiorem spe dimicationem vidit, ne militum virtuti damno locus esset, ignibus crebris relictis, qui conspectum hostium frustrarentur, silentio legiones educit; nec tamen fallere propter propinquitatem castrorum potuit. Eques extemplo insecutus ita institit agmini ut, donec lucesceret, proelio abstineret; ne¹ pedestres quidem copiae ante lucem castris egressae. Eques luce demum ausus incursare in hostem, carpendo novissimos premendoque inquis ad transitum locis, agmen detinuit. Interim pedes equitem adsecutus, et totis iam copiis Samnis urgebat. Tum dictator, postquam sine

¹ ne ο : nec *U*ς.

XXXVIII. In the following year, when Quintus Fabius and Lucius Fulvius were consuls, the dread of a serious war with the Samnites—who were said to have gathered an army of mercenaries from neighbouring tribes—occasioned the appointment of Aulus Cornelius Arvina as dictator and Marcus Fabius Ambustus as master of the horse. By a vigorous levy these men raised an excellent army, and marching against the Samnites, went into camp on hostile soil with as little regard to their position as if the enemy had been far away. Suddenly the Samnite legions appeared, and advancing with great hardihood entrenched themselves close to the Roman outposts. Night was now drawing on, which prevented them from assaulting the Roman works; but they made no secret of their intention to do so with the morrow's earliest light. The dictator saw that the battle was coming sooner than he had anticipated, and feared that the courage of his men would be affected by their cramped position. So, leaving behind him numerous fires to deceive the enemy, he silently led the legions out. But the camps were so near each other that he could not elude their observation. Their cavalry at once pursued him, but though they hung upon the fringe of his column, they refrained from attacking until the day began to break; as for the infantry, they did not even leave their stockade before the dawn. Finally, when it was light, the cavalry ventured to charge the Romans, and by harassing their rear and pressing them when they came to places that were difficult to cross, delayed their march. Meanwhile the foot had caught up with the horse, and the Samnites were throwing all their forces into the assault. Then the

magno incommodo progredi non poterat, eum ipsum
in quo constiterat locum castris dimetari iussit.
Id¹ vero circumfuso undique equitatu—ut vallum
peteretur opusque inciperet—fieri non poterat.

8 Itaque ubi neque eundi neque manendi copiam esse videt, instruit aciem, impedimentis ex agmine remotis. Instruunt contra et hostes, et animis et 9 viribus pares. Auxerat id maxime animos quod ignari loco iniquo, non hosti cessum, velut fugientes 10 ac territos terribiles ipsi secuti fuerant. Id aliquandiu aequavit pugnam, iam pridem desueto Samnite clamorem Romani exercitus pati; et hercule² illo die ab hora diei tertia ad octavam
ita anceps dicitur certamen stetisse, ut neque clamor, ut primo semel concursu est sublatus, iteratus sit,
neque signa promota loco retrove recepta, neque 11 recursum ab ulla sit parte. In suo quisque gradu obnixi,³ urgentes scutis, sine respiratione ac respectu pugnabant; fremitus aequalis tenorque idem pugnae
in defatigationem ultimam aut noctem spectabat.
12 Iam viris vires, iam ferro sua vis, iam consilia ducibus deerant, cum subito Samnitium equites, cum turma una longius proiecta accepissent impedimenta

¹ id Ω: ibi Weissenborn.

² Et hercule (-lae T) Ω Abbas: at hercule Ο Gelenius.

³ obnixi A²: obnixis U: obnoxi T²(or T¹): obnoxio Ο:
obnoxii MPHDLA: ab obnoxii F: obnoxiis F³T.

dictator, finding that he could make no headway without great distress, gave orders to lay out a camp on the very spot where he had halted. But enveloped, as they were, by the enemy's horse, it was impossible to gather stakes and begin the work.

And so, when he saw that he could neither advance nor encamp, he removed the baggage from his column and formed a line of battle. The enemy then formed up against him, being inferior neither in spirit nor in strength. Their encouragement was due chiefly to ignorance that their enemies had retreated from an awkward position, and not from them; for they assumed that their own doughty appearance had driven the Romans before them in a panic. This held the fighting in balance for a while, though the Samnites had now for some time been unused to abide the battle-cry of a Roman army. Indeed it is said that on that day from the third hour to the eighth the outcome was so much in doubt, that there was never a second cheer after that which was once given when the armies rushed together; nor were standards either moved forward or withdrawn; nor did the combatants anywhere give ground. Facing each other with every man squarely in his place, they pressed forward with their shields and fought without stopping to breathe or to look behind. The monotonous din and changeless tenor of the battle made it seem probable that sheer exhaustion or the night would put an end to it. And now men's strength was ebbing, and the sword was forgetting its keenness and the generals their strategy:—when the Samnite horsemen, learning from one of their squadrons that had pushed on ahead how the

Romanorum procul ab armatis sine praesidio, sine
munitione stare, aviditate praedae impetum faciunt.
13 Quod ubi dictatori trepidus nuntius attulit, "Sine modo" inquit, "sese praeda praepediant." Alii deinde super alios diripi passim ferrique fortunas 14 militum vociferabantur. Tum magistro equitum accito "Vides tu" inquit, "M. Fabi, ab hostium equite omissam pugnam? Haerent impediti impedi-15 mentis nostris. Adgredere, quod inter praedandum omni multitudini evenit, dissipatos; raros equis insidentes, raros, quibus ferrum in manu sit, invenies;
sese equosque¹ dum praeda onerant, caede inermes 16 cruentamque illis praedam redde. Mihi legiones peditumque pugna curae erunt; penes te equestre sit decus."

XXXIX. Equitum acies, qualis quae esse instructissima potest, invecta in dissipatos impeditosque
2 hostes caede omnia replet. Inter sarcinas omissas repente, obiacentes pedibus fugientium consterna-
torumque equorum, neque pugnae neque fugae satis
3 potentes caeduntur. Tum delecto prope equitatu hostium M. Fabius circumductis paulum alis² ab 4 tergo pedestrem aciem adoritur. Clamor inde novus accidens et Samnitium terruit animos, et dictator,
ubi respectantes hostium antesignanos turbataque

¹ sese equosque Lutzbacher (se equosque Mudvig): equosque
(or aequosq.) P FUHT²D: et quosque MTLA₇.

² alis T³: aliis (omitted by L A G).

baggage of the Romans lay remote from their fighting men, without defenders or a rampart to protect it, were seized with the lust of pillaging, and made a sudden dash for it. But when a frightened messenger brought word of this to the dictator, he said, "Only let them cumber themselves with spoil!" After that came others and still others, crying aloud that the soldiers' possessions were being plundered and carried clean away. Then Cornelius called the master of the horse and said, "Do you not see, Marcus Fabius, how the enemy's cavalry have ceased to fight? They are caught fast and entangled in our baggage. Have at them while they are dispersed, as any body of men will be in pillaging! You shall find few in the saddle, few sword in hand; while they are loading themselves and their horses with spoils, cut them down unarmed and make it a bloody booty for them. I will see to the legions and the battle of the infantry; be yours the glory of the cavalry fight."

XXXIX. The cavalry, drawn up in the most perfect order, charged their scattered and embarrassed enemies and cut them down on every hand. They had hastily flung aside their packs—which lay all about and impeded the terrified horses as they tried to run away—and, powerless either to resist or to escape, were massacred where they stood. Then Marcus Fabius, having almost annihilated the enemy's cavalry, fetched a short compass with his squadrons and attacked from behind their line of infantry. The shouts that were now heard in that quarter struck terror into the hearts of the Samnites; and the dictator, seeing the men in their fighting line glance nervously behind them, and their standards signa et fluctuantem aciem vidi, tum appellare, tum adhortari milites, tribunos principesque ordinum

 nominatim ad iterandam secum pugnare vocare.
 5 Novato clamore signa inferuntur; et quidquid pro-grediebantur, magis magisque turbatos, hostes cernebant. Eques ipse iam primis erat in conspectu, et 6 Cornelius respiciens ad manipulos militum, quod
 manu, quod voce poterat, monstrabat vexilla se 7 suorum parmasque cernere equitum. Quod ubi auditum simul visumque est, adeo repente laboris
 per diem paene totum tolerati volnerumque obliti sunt, ut haud secus quam si tum integri e castris
 signum pugnae accepissent concitaverint se in hostem.
 8 Nec ultra Samnis tolerare terrorem equitum pedi-tumque vim potuit; partim in medio caesi, partim 9 in fugam dissipati sunt. Pedes¹ restantes ac circumventos cecidit: ab equite fugientium strages est
 facta, inter quos et ipse imperator cecidit.
 10 Hoc demum proelium Samnitium res ita infregit, ut omnibus conciliis fremerent minime id quidem
 mirum esse, si impio bello et contra foedus suscepto, infestioribus merito deis quam hominibus nihil prospere agerent; expiandum id bellum magna 11 mercede luendumque esse; id referre tantum, utrum
 supplicia noxio paucorum an omnium innoxio prae-

¹ pedes Gelenius ("scriptura vetus") ♂: pedes res M: pedestres (pedestris U) ♀.

¹ That of 341 B.C. See chap. ii § 4, and (for the violation) chap. xxii. § 7 and chap. xxiii. § 1.

become disordered, and their line begin to waver, then cried out to his men, then urged them on, and called by name on tribunes and company-commanders to join him in a new attack. With a fresh cheer the ranks pressed forward, and at each advance perceived the Samnites to be more and more confused. The horse themselves could now be seen by those in the van ; and Cornelius, looking back on the maniples of soldiers, made them understand as best he could with hand and voice that he saw the banners and round shields of their comrades. On hearing and at the same time seeing them, they straightway forgot the toil they had endured for well-nigh the entire day, and forgot their wounds, and, like troops who were but that moment fresh from camp and had received the battle-signal, they flung themselves upon the enemy. The Samnites could support no longer the fury of the cavalry and the violent onset of the foot ; some were slaughtered in the midst, others were scattered abroad in flight. The foot-soldiers surrounded those who resisted and put them to the sword ; the cavalry made havoc of the fugitives, amongst whom perished their general himself.

This defeat, after all that had gone before, so broke the spirit of the Samnites, that in all their councils they began to murmur that it was no wonder if they met with no success in an impious war, undertaken in violation of a treaty,¹ for the gods had even more right than men to be incensed with them. They would have to pay a heavy price to expiate this war and atone for it ; the only question was, should they offer atonement with the blood of the guilty few or with that of the innocent

A.U.C.
432

beant sanguine; audebantque iam quidam nominare 12 auctores armorum. Unum maxime nomen per con-sensum clamantium Brutuli Papi exaudiebatur. Vir nobilis potensque erat, haud dubie proximarum in-13 dutiarum ruptor. De eo coacti referre, praetores decretum fecerunt, ut Brutulus Papius Romanis dederetur et cum eo praeda omnis Romana captivique ut Romam mitterentur, quaeque res per fetiales
 ex foedere repetitae essent secundum ius fasque 14 restituerentur. Fetiales Romam, ut censuerunt, missi, et corpus Brutuli exanime; ipse morte volun-15 taria ignominiae se ac suppicio subtraxit. Placuit cum corpore bona quoque eius dedi. Nihil tamen earum rerum praeter captivos ac si qua cognita
 ex praeda sunt acceptum est; ceterarum rerum inrita fuit deditio. Dictator ex senatus consulto triumphavit.

XL. Hoc bellum a consulibus bellatum quidam auctores sunt, eosque de Samnitibus triumphasse;
 Fabium etiam in Apuliam processisse atque inde
 2 magnas praedas egisse. Nec discrepat quin dictator eo anno A. Cornelius fuerit; id ambigitur, belline gerendi causa creatus sit, an ut esset qui ludis Romanis, quia L. Plautius praetor gravi morbo forte
 3 implicitus erat, signum mittendis quadrigis daret

¹ i.e. the Romans would not accept the tardy compliance of the Samnites with the old terms, being resolved to impose harder ones.

² Instituted by Tarquinius Priscus (I. xxxv. 9).

multitude? Some ventured at this juncture to name those who had been responsible for the war. One name in particular could be distinguished; for all agreed in denouncing Papius Brutulus, a powerful noble who had without question been the breaker of the latest truce. The praetors were compelled to refer his case to the council, which decreed that Papius Brutulus should be surrendered to the Romans, and that all the Roman booty and all the prisoners should be sent with him to Rome; and further, that all the property which the fetials had sought to recover under the provisions of the treaty should be restored in compliance with law and with religion. The fetials proceeded to Rome, in accordance with this resolution, taking with them the lifeless body of Brutulus, who had escaped the humiliation and punishment by a voluntary death. It was voted to surrender his goods also with his body. But of all these things the Romans would accept none but the prisoners and such articles of booty as they recognized as theirs; the surrender of all the rest was of no effect.¹ The dictator triumphed by resolution of the senate.

XL. Some writers hold that this war was waged by the consuls, and that it was they who triumphed over the Samnites; they say that Fabius even advanced into Apulia and thence drove off much booty. But that Aulus Cornelius was dictator in that year is not disputed, and the doubt is only whether he was appointed to administer the war, or in order that there might be somebody to give the signal to the chariots at the Roman Games²—since the praetor, Lucius Plautius, happened to be very sick—and whether, having discharged this office, functusque eo haud sane memorandi imperii ministerio se dictatura abdicaret. Nec facile est autem rem rei aut auctorem auctori praferre. Vitiata memoriā funebris laudibus reor falsisque imaginum titulis, dum familiae¹ ad se quaeque famam rerum gestarum honorumque fallenti mendacio trahunt; inde certe et singulorum gesta et publica monumenta rerum confusa. Nec quisquam aequalis temporibus illis scriptor exstat, quo satis certo auctore stetur.

LIVY

A.U.C.
432

¹ familiae γ = Madrig: familia Ω.

BOOK VIII. xl. 3-5

which is, to be sure, no very noteworthy exercise of B.C. 322 power, he resigned the dictatorship. It is not easy to choose between the accounts or the authorities. The records have been vitiated, I think, by funeral eulogies and by lying inscriptions under portraits, every family endeavouring mendaciously to appropriate victories and magistracies to itself—a practice which has certainly wrought confusion in the achievements of individuals and in the public memorials of events. Nor is there extant any writer contemporary with that period, on whose authority we may safely take our stand.

LIBRI VIII PERIOCCHI

LATINI cum Campanis defecere et missis legatis ad senatum condicionem tulerunt ut si pacem habere vellent alterum ex Latinis consulem facerent. Qua legatione perlata praetor eorum Annius de Capitolio ita lapsus est ut examinaretur. T. Manlius consul filium, quod contra edictum eius adversus Latinos pugnaverat, quamvis prospere pugnasset, securi pereussit. Laborantibus in aeie Romanis P. Decius, tunc consul cum Manlio, devovit se pro exercitu, et concitato equo cum in medios hostes se intulisset, interfectus morte sua Romanis victoriam restituit. Latini in ditionem venerunt. T. Manlio in urbem reverso nemo ex inventute obviam processit. Minucia virgo Vestalis incesti damnata est. Ausonibus viatis et oppido ex is capto Cales¹ item² Fregellae coloniae deductae sunt. Beneficium complurium matronarum deprehensum est, ex quibus plurimae statim epotis medicaminibus perierunt. Lex de beneficio tunc primum constituta est. Privernatibus, cum bellassent, viatis civitas data est. Neapolitani bello et obsidione vieti in ditionem venerunt. Q. Publilio, qui eos obsederat, primo et imperium prolatum est et pro cos. triumphus decretus. Plebs nexus liberata est propter L. Papiri creditoris libidinem, qui C. Publilio debitori suo stuprum inferre voluerat. Cum L. Papirius Cursor dictator reversus in urbem ab exercitu esset propter auspicia repetenda, Q. Fabius magister equitum, occasione bene gerendae rei invitatus, contra edictum eius prospere adversus Sammites pugnavit. Ob eam causam cum dictator de magistro equitum supplicium sumpturus videretur, Fabius Romam profugit, et cum parum causa proficeret, populi preeibus donatus est. Res praeterea contra Sammites prospere gestas continet.

¹ et oppido ex is capto Cales Rosbach: in oppido ex his cales capto cales (or in oppido ex his capto cales) MSS.

² item Gronovius: item colonia deducta est MSS.

SUMMARY OF BOOK VIII.

THE Latins and Campanians revolted, and sending envoys to the senate proposed as a condition of peace that one of the two consuls should be chosen from the Latins. After delivering these terms, their praetor Annius fell from the Capitol, and so lost consciousness. Titus Manlius the consul had his son beheaded, because he had fought—albeit successfully—against the Latins in defiance of his edict. In a battle which was going against the Romans, Publius Decius, who was then consul, along with Manlius, devoted himself in behalf of the army, and having spurred his horse among the enemy, was slain, and by his death restored the victory to the Romans. The Latins surrendered. Titus Manlius, returning to the City, was met by none of the young men. Minucia, a Vestal virgin, was convicted of in chastity. The Ausionians were defeated; and their town being taken from them, the colonies of Cales and Fregellae were established. A number of matrons were discovered to be guilty of poisoning, of whom very many drank off at once the drugs they had prepared, and died. A law about poisoning was then for the first time enacted. The Prvernates, having gone to war, were defeated and given citizenship. The Neapolitans were beaten in war and in a siege, and made submission. Quintus Publilius, who had besieged them, was the first to have his authority extended and to be granted a triumph as proconsul. The plebs were relieved of imprisonment for debt on account of the lust of Lueius Papirius, a creditor, who had sought to violate the chastity of his debtor, Gaius Publilius. When Lueius Papirius Cursor the dictator had returned from the army to the City in order to renew the auspices, Quintus Fabius, the master of the horse, tempted by the opportunity for a successful action, fought the Samnites, against orders, and gained a victory. For this reason it appeared that the dictator would punish the master of the horse; but Fabius fled to Rome, and though his cause was weak, was begged off by the people. The book also contains victories over the Samnites.

BOOK IX

LIBER IX

A.U.C.
433

I. SEQUITUR hunc annum nobilis clade Romana Caudina pax T. Veturio Calvinio Sp. Postumio con-sulibus. Samnites eo anno imperatorem C. Pontium Herenni filium habuerunt, patre longe prudentissi-mo natum, primum ipsum bellatorem ducemque.
Is, ubi legati qui ad dedendas res missi erant pace
infecta redierunt, “Ne nihil actum” inquit “hac legatione censeatis, expiatum est quidquid ex foedere rupto irarum in nos caelestium fuit. Satis scio quibuscumque dis cordi fuit subigi nos ad necessitatem dedendi res quae ab nobis ex foedere repetitae fuerant, iis non fuisse cordi tam superbe ab Romanis foederis expiationem spretam. Quid enim ultra fieri ad placandos deos mitigandosque homines potuit quam quod nos fecimus? Res hostium in praeda captas, quae belli iure nostrae videbantur, remisimus;
auctores belli, quia vivos non potuimus, perfunctos
iam fato dedidimus; bona eorum, ne quid ex contagione noxae remaneret penes nos, Romam portavimus. Quid ultra tibi, Romane, quid foederi, quid dis arbitraris foederis debeo? Quem tibi tuarum

¹ For the second time, having held the office together thirteen years before.

² The reference is to events described at VIII. xxxvii. 3.

BOOK IX

I. IN the following year came the Caudine Peace, ^{B.C. 321} the notorious sequel of a disaster to the Roman arms. Titus Veturius Calvinus and Spurius Postumius were consuls.¹ The Samnites had that year for their general Gaius Pontius, whose father Herennius far excelled them all in wisdom, while the son was their foremost warrior and captain. When the envoys who had been dispatched to make restitution returned without having achieved a peace, Pontius said : “ You must not think that this embassy has been of no avail : whatever divine resentment we incurred by breaking the treaty ² has been appeased. Well do I know that whatever gods desired that we might be compelled to restore the spoils which had been demanded again of us in accordance with the treaty did not desire that our expiation of the treaty should be so scornfully rejected by the Romans. For what more could have been done to mollify the gods and to placate men than we have done ? The goods of the enemy which we had taken as booty, and regarded as our own by the laws of war, we restored to them ; the authors of the war, whom we could not surrender living, we surrendered dead ; their possessions—that no guilt might remain with us from touching them—we carried to Rome. What more do I owe to you, Romans, or to the treaty, or to the gods, its witnesses ? Whom can I proffer as umpire betwixt irarum, quem meorum suppliciorum iudicem feram? Neminem neque populum neque privatum fugio. Quod si nihil cum potentiore iuris humani relinquitur inopi, at ego ad deos vindices intolerandae superbiae configiam et precabor ut iras suas vertant in eos quibus non suae redditae res, non alienae accumulatae satis sint; quorum saevitiam non mors noxiorum, non deditio exanimatorum corporum, non bona sequentia domini ditionem exsatient,¹ nisi hauriendum sanguinem laniandaque viscera nostra praebuerimus. Iustum est bellum, Samnites, quibus necessarium, et pia arma quibus nulla nisi in armis relinquitur spes. Proinde, cum rerum humanarum maximum momentum sit, quam propitiis rem, quam adversis agant dis, pro certo habete priora bella adversus deos magis quam homines gessisse, hoc quod instat ducibus ipsis dis gesturos.”

II. Haec non laeta magis quam vera vaticinatus exercitu educto circa Caudium castra quam potest occultissime locat. Inde ad Calatiam, ubi iam consules Romanos castraque esse audiebat, milites decem pastorum habitu mittit pecoraque diversos, alium alibi, haud procul Romanis pascere iubet praesidiis; ubi inciderint in praedatores, ut idem omnibus sermo constet, legiones Samnitium in Apulia esse, Luceriam omnibus copiis circumsedere nec procul abesse quin

¹ exsident Walters: exsident placari nequeant (-unt F³) Ω: exsident placari qui nequeant Drakenborch: exsident; qui placari nequeant Gronorius.

your anger and my punishment? I refuse no nation, B.C. 321
 no private citizen. But if, in dealing with the mighty, the weak are left no human rights, yet will I seek protection of the gods, who visit retribution on intolerable pride, and will beseech them that they turn their anger against those who are not content with the restitution of their own possessions, nor the heaping up in addition of other men's; whose rage is not sated with the death of the guilty, nor with the surrender of their lifeless bodies, nor with the master's goods going with that surrender—unless we yield them our blood to drink and our flesh to rend. Samnites, that war is just which is necessary, and righteous are their arms to whom, save only in arms, no hope is left. Since, therefore, it is of the utmost moment in the affairs of men whether what they undertake be pleasing in the sight of Heaven or whether it be offensive, be well assured that you waged your former war rather against gods than men, but that you will wage this war now threatening with the gods themselves for your leaders."

II. Having pronounced these words, as prophetic as they were encouraging, he led his army out and encamped with all possible secrecy in the vicinity of Caudium. Thence he dispatched in the direction of Calatia, where he heard that the Roman consuls were already in camp, ten soldiers in the guise of shepherds, with orders to graze their flocks—dispersed one here another there—at no great distance from the Romans. On encountering pillagers, they were all to tell one story; namely, that the Samnite levies were in Apulia, where they were laying siege with all their forces to Luceria, and were on the

A.U.C.
433

4 vi capiant. Iam is rumor et ante¹ de industria volgatus venerat ad Romanos, sed fidem auxere captivi eo maxime quod sermo inter omnes congruebat. Haud erat dubium quin Lucerini opem Romanus ferret, bonis ac fidelibus sociis, simul ne
 Apulia omnis ad praesentem terrorem deficeret: ea
 modo qua irent consultatio fuit.

6 Due ad Luceriam ferebant viae, altera praeter
 oram superi maris, patens apertaque sed quanto
 tutior tanto fere longior, altera per furculas Caudinas, 7 brevior; sed ita natus locus est: saltus duo alti
 angusti silvosique sunt montibus circa perpetuis
 inter se iuncti; iacet inter eos satis patens clausus
 in medio campus herbidus aquosusque, per quem 8 medium iter est; sed antequam venias ad eum, intrandae primae angustiae sunt, et aut eadem qua
 te insinuaveris retro via repetenda aut, si ire porro pergas, per alium saltum artiorem impeditioremque, evadendum.

9 In eum campum via alia per cavam rupem Romani
 demisso² agmine cum ad³ alias angustias protinus pergerent, saeptas deiectu arborum saxorumque ingentium obiacente mole⁴ invenere. Cum fraus hostilis apparisset, praesidium etiam in summo 10 saltu conspicitur. Citati inde retro, qua venerant pergunt repetere viam; eam quoque clausam sua

¹ iam is rumor et ante H. J. Mueller: iam is n (or 7 i.e. et) rumor ante P: iam et is rumor ante P¹F¹U: iam is α rumor ante M.

² demisso ζ : remisso Ω .

³ cum ad T¹ ζ : quō ad U: qm̄ ad PFT² (marg.): quad M: ad TDLA: quo ad A^x.

⁴ obiacente mole ζ Sigonius: obiacente molem D: obiacentem molem Ω .

point of taking it by assault. This rumour, which ^{B.C. 321} had designedly been given out before, had already come to the ears of the Romans, but the prisoners strengthened their belief in it, especially since they all gave the same account. The Romans did not hesitate about helping the Lucerini, their good and faithful allies, and preventing Apulia at the same time from a general defection in the face of instant peril: the only subject of deliberation was by what route they should march.

There were two roads to Luceria. One skirted the Adriatic, and though open and unobstructed, was long almost in proportion to its safety. The other led through the Caudine Forks,¹ and was shorter, but this is the nature of the place: two deep defiles, narrow and wooded, are connected by an unbroken range of mountains on either hand; shut in between them lies a rather extensive plain, grassy and well-watered, with the road running through the middle of it; but before you come to it, you must enter the first defile, and afterwards either retrace the steps by which you made your way into the place, or else—should you go forward—pass out by another ravine, which is even narrower and more difficult.

Into this plain the Romans debouched from the rocky gorge of one of the two passes; and advancing forthwith to the other pass, found it blocked with a barrier of felled trees and huge boulders. The enemy's stratagem now stood revealed, and indeed a body of troops was descried at the head of the defile. The Romans thereupon hastened back to regain the road by which they had come, but found that this was likewise closed with its own

¹ See map at the end of the volume.

obice armisque inveniunt. Sistunt inde gradum sine ullius imperio, stuporque omnium animos ac 11 velut torpor quidam insolitus membra tenet, intuentesque alii alios, cum alterum quisque compotem
 magis mentis ac consilii ducerent, diu immobiles 12 silent; deinde, ubi praetoria consulum erigi videre et expedire quosdam utilia operi, quamquam ludibrio 13 fore munientes perditis rebus ac spe omni adempta cernebant, tamen, ne culpam malis adderent, pro se quisque nec hortante ullo nec imperante ad
 muniendum versi castra propter aquam vallo circum-14 dant, sua ipsi opera laboremque inritum, praeterquam quod hostes superbe increpabant, cum miserabili 15 confessione eludentes. Ad consules maestos, ne advocantes quidem in consilium, quando nec consilio nec auxilio locus esset, sua sponte legati ac tribuni conveniunt, militesque ad praetorium versi opein, quam vix di immortales ferre poterant, ab ducibus exposcunt.

III. Querentes magis quam consultantes nox oppressit, cum pro ingenio quisque fremerent: "Per obices viarum," alias,¹ "per adversa montium, per 2 silvas, qua ferri arma poterunt, eamus, modo ad
 hostem pervenire liceat, quem per annos iam prope
 triginta vincimus; omnia aequa et plana erunt

¹ "per obices viarum." alias Walters: alias (alium M)
 per obices viarum alias N: alias "per obices viarum; Sigon.
Muretus.

¹ The speaker disregards the interval of peace (341–328).

barricade and armed men. At this they came to a halt, without any command, and a stupor came over the minds of all, and a strange kind of numbness over their bodies; and looking at one another—for every man supposed his neighbour more capable of thinking and planning than himself—they stood for a long time motionless and silent. Afterwards, when they saw the tents of the consuls going up and some of the men getting out entrenching tools, although they perceived that in their desperate plight, deprived of every hope, it would be ridiculous for them to entrench themselves, nevertheless, that they might not add a fault to their misfortunes, they fell to digging—each for himself with no encouragement or command from anyone—and fortified a camp close to the water; meanwhile not only did their enemies insolently scoff at them, but they jested themselves, with pathetic candour, at the futility of their works and the pains they took. The dejected consuls did not even call a council, for the situation admitted neither of discussion nor of help, but the lieutenants and tribunes assembled of their own accord, and the soldiers, turning to the headquarters tent, called on their generals for help, which the immortal gods could scarce have given them.

III. Night came, and found them not so much consulting as lamenting, while each murmured as his nature prompted him. “Let us force the barriers of the road,” said one, “let us scale the mountains, penetrate the forests, go wherever we can carry arms, if only we may come at the enemy, whom we have now been conquering for close upon thirty years¹; any field will be smooth and level to a

A.D.C.
433 Romano in perfidum Samnitem pugnanti"; alius:
3 "Quo aut qua eamus? Num montes moliri sede sua paramus? Dum haec imminebunt iuga, qua tu ad hostem venias?¹ Armati inermes, fortes ignavi, pariter omnes capti atque victi sumus; ne ferrum
quidem ad bene moriendum oblaturus est hostis;
4 sedens bellum conficiet." His in vicem sermonibus qua cibi qua quietis immemor nox traducta est.

Ne Samnitibus quidem consilium in tam laetis
suppetebat rebus; itaque universi Herennium Pontium, patrem imperatoris, per litteras consu-
5 lendum censem. Iam is gravis annis non militaribus solum sed civilibus quoque abscesserat muneribus;
in corpore tamen affecto vigebat vis animi con-6 siliique. Is ubi accepit ad furculas Caudinas inter duos saltus clausos esse exercitus Romanos, consultus
ab nuntio filii censuit omnes inde quam primum
7 inviolatos dimittendos. Quae ubi spreta sententia est iterumque eodem remeante nuntio consulebatur, 8 censuit ad unum omnes interficiendos. Quae ubi tam discordia inter se velut ex ancipiti oraculo responsa data sunt, quamquam filius ipse in primis
iam animum quoque patris consensisse in affecto
corpore rebatur, tamen consensu omnium victus est
9 ut ipsum in consilium acciret. Nec gravatus senex

¹ venias A (Madvig): uenies Ω.

Roman who fights against a treacherous Samnite!" B.C. 321
 Another would ask: "Where or by what way can we go? Do we think to remove the mountains from their seat? So long as these ridges tower over you, how shall you come at the enemy? Armed and unarmed, the brave and the cowardly, we are all alike captured and beaten men. The foe will not even draw his sword on us, that we may die with honour; he will end the war by sitting still." With such-like exchange of talk the night wore on, neither was there any thought of food or sleep.

Even the Samnites were at a loss what course to follow in such happy circumstances; and accordingly they agreed unanimously to dispatch a letter to Herennius Pontius, the father of their general, asking his advice. This man, bowed down with years, had already withdrawn not only from military but even from civic duties; yet, despite his bodily infirmity, his mind and judgment retained their vigour. When he learned that the Roman armies had been hemmed in between two defiles at the Caudine Forks, and was asked by his son's messenger for his opinion, he advised that they should all be dismissed unscathed, at the earliest possible moment. This policy having been rejected, and the messenger returning a second time to seek his counsel, he recommended that all, to the last man, be slain. Having received these answers, as inconsistent as the riddling responses of an oracle, the younger Pontius was among the first to conclude that his father's mind had now given way along with his failing body, but yielded to the general desire and sent for him to advise with them in person. The old man made no objection: he was plaastro in castra dicitur advectus vocatusque in consilium ita ferme locutus esse ut nihil sententiae 10 suae mutaret, causas tantum adiceret: priore se consilio, quod optimum duceret, cum potentissimo populo per ingens beneficium perpetuam firmare

 pacem amicitiamque; altero consilio in multas aetas, quibus amissis duobus exercitibus haud facile receptura vires Romana res esset, bellum differre; tertium 11 nullum consilium esse. Cum filius aliquique principes percontando¹ exsequerentur, quid si media via consilii caperetur, ut et dimitterentur incolumes et 12 leges iis iure belli victis imponerentur, "Ista quidem sententia" inquit "ea est, quae neque amicos parat nec inimicos tollit. Servate modo quos ignominia irritaveritis: ea est Romana gens quae victa quiescere 13 nesciat. Vivet semper in pectoribus illorum quid-quid istuc praesens necessitas inusserit, nec eos ante
 multiplices poenas expetitas a vobis quiescere sinet."

Neutra sententia accepta Herennius domum e castris est avectus.

IV. Et in castris Romanis cum frustra multi conatus ad erumpendum capti essent et iam omnium
 2 rerum inopia esset, victi necessitate legatos mittunt qui primum pacem aequam peterent; si pacem non 3 impetrarent, uti provocarent ad pugnam. Tum Pontius debellatum esse respondit; et, quoniam ne

¹ percontando \mathcal{A} : percunctando \mathfrak{Z} .

brought to the camp in a waggon—so the story B.C. 321 runs—and being invited to join the council of war, spoke to such purpose as merely, without changing his opinion, to add thereto his reasons: If, he said, they adopted his first proposal—which he held to be the best—they would establish lasting peace and friendship with a very powerful people by conferring an enormous benefit upon them; by adopting the other plan they would postpone the war for many generations, in which time the Roman State, having lost two armies, would not easily regain its strength; there was no third plan. When his son and the other leading men pressed him to say what would happen if they took a middle course, and while letting them go unhurt imposed terms upon them by the rights of war, as upon the vanquished, “That,” he answered, “is in sooth a policy that neither wins men friends nor rids them of their enemies. Spare, if you will, those whom you have stung to anger with humiliation; the Roman race is one that knows not how to be still under defeat. Whatever shame you brand them with in their present necessity, the wound will ever rankle in their bosoms, nor will it suffer them to rest until they have exacted many times as heavy a penalty of you.” Neither proposal was accepted, and Herennius was carried home from the camp.

IV. In the other camp the Romans, finding themselves now, after many fruitless efforts to break out, in want of everything, were reduced to the necessity of sending envoys; who were first to treat for an equal peace, and, if peace could not be had, to provoke the enemy to fight. To them Pontius made answer, that the war was

victi quidem ac capti fortunam fateri scirent, inermes cum singulis vestimentis sub iugum missurum; alias 4 condiciones pacis aequas victis ac victoribus fore: si agro Samnitium decederetur, coloniae abducerentur, suis inde legibus Romanum ac Samnitem aequo 5 foedere victurum; his condicionibus paratum se esse foedus cum consulibus ferire; si quid eorum dis-6 pliceat, legatos redire ad se vetuit. Haec cum legatio renuntiaretur, tantus gemitus omnium subito
 exortus est tantaque maestitia incessit ut non gravius accepturi viderentur si nuntiaretur omnibus eo loco mortem oppetendam¹ esse.

7 Cum diu silentium fuisse nec consules aut pro
 foedere tam turpi aut contra foedus tam necessarium hincere possent, tum L. Lentulus, qui princeps² 8 legatorum virtute atque honoribus erat: "Patrem
 meum" inquit, "consules, saepe audivi memorantem
 se in Capitolio unum non fuisse auctorem senatui
 redimendae auro a Gallis civitatis, quando nec fossa
 valloque ab ignavissimo ad opera ac muniendum
 hoste clausi essent et erumpere, si non sine magno 9 periculo tamen sine certa pernicie, possent. Quod si, ut illis³ decurrere ex Capitolio armatis in hostem
 licuit, quo saepe modo obsessi in obsidentes eru-

¹ oppetendam *F&A*¹: appetendam U.A: adpetendam MPOTDL.

² princeps Drakenborch: tum princeps Ω.

³ ut illis Aldus: illis ut Ω.

¹ He had been consul 328 B.C. (viii. xxii. 8). His descendants assumed the surname of Caudini and a P. Cornelius Caudinus is mentioned at xxvi. xlvi. 9 and a L. Cornelius Caudinus at xxvii. xxi. 9.

already fought and won; and since they knew B.C. 321
 not how to admit their plight, even when beaten and made prisoners, he intended to send them unarmed and with a single garment each under the yoke; in all else the peace should be one of equal terms to the vanquished and the victors; for if the Romans would evacuate the Samnite territory and withdraw their colonies, Romans and Samnites should thenceforward live by their own laws in an equal alliance. On these terms he was ready to conclude a treaty with the consuls; if they were any of them unacceptable, he forbade the envoys to return to him. When the upshot of this embassy was made known to the Romans, they all straightway fell to groaning, and so overcome were they with sorrow that it seemed as though they could not possibly take it more to heart if they should be told that they must all die in that place.

Finally, after a long silence—for the consuls were incapable of uttering a word, either for a treaty
 so disgraceful or against a treaty so necessary—Lucius Lentulus, at that time first of the lieutenants both for his valour and his dignities,¹ spoke as follows: “Consuls, I have often heard my father say that on the Capitol he was the only man who would not have the senate ransom the City from the Gauls with gold, since their enemies, who were most indolent besiegers, had not shut them in with trench and rampart, and they were able to make a sortie, if not without great danger, yet without certain destruction. But if, in like manner as they had it in their power to run down from the Capitol, sword in hand, against their enemy, even as the besieged have often sallied out against the besiegers,

A.U.C.
433

perunt, ita nobis aequo aut iniquo loco dimicandi
 tantummodo cum hoste copia esset, non mihi paterni animi indoles in consilio dando deesset. Evidem mortem pro patria praeclaram esse fateor et me vel devovere pro populo Romano legionibusque vel in medios immittere hostes¹ paratus sum; sed hic patriam video, hic quidquid Romanarum legionum
 est, quae nisi pro se ipsis ad mortem ruere volunt, quid habent quod morte sua servent? 'Tecta urbis'
 dicat aliquis 'et moenia et eam turbam a qua urbs incolitur.' Immo hercule produntur ea omnia deleto hoc exercitu, non servantur. Quis enim ea tuebitur?
 Imbellis videlicet atque inermis multitudo. Tam hercule quam a Gallorum impetu defendit. An a Veiis exercitum Camillumque ducem implorabunt?
 Hic omnes spes opesque sunt, quas servando patriam
 servamus, dedendo ad necem patriam deserimus ac
 prodimus. 'At foeda atque ignominiosa deditio est.'
 Sed ea caritas patriae est ut tam ignominia eam quam morte nostra, si opus sit, servemus. Subeatur ergo ista, quantacumque est, indignitas et pareatur necessitati, quam ne di quidem superant. Ite, consules, redimite armis civitatem quam auro maiores vestri redemerunt."

V. Consules profecti ad Pontium in conloquium, cum de foedore victor agitaret, negarunt iniussu
 populi foedus fieri posse nec sine fetialibus caeri-moniaque alia sollemni. Itaque non, ut volgo-

¹ in medios immittere hostes Gronorius: in medios hostes me immittere O: in medios me immittere hostes Ω.

so we were able, whether on favourable ground or ^{B.C. 321} no, only to come to grips with our antagonist, I should not lack my father's spirit in advising you. I do indeed confess that it is glorious to die for one's country, and I am ready to devote myself for the Roman People and the legions, or to throw myself into the midst of the enemy; but it is here I see my country, here all the legions Rome possesses, and unless they would rush on death to please themselves, what have they to save by dying? 'The roof-trees of the City,' someone may say, 'and its walls, and the multitude by whom it is inhabited.' Nay, not so! For all these are betrayed, not saved, if this army is wiped out! For who shall preserve them? The unwarlike, unarmed rabble? Ay, even as it preserved them from the onset of the Gauls! Or will they pray perhaps that an army may be sent from Veii, and a Camillus to command it? Here are all our hopes and our resources, which if we save we save our country; whereas if we give these up to die, we abandon our country and betray it. 'But surrender is shameful and humiliating.' True, but our country is so dear that we would save it by enduring shame, as we would, if need were, by our death. Let us submit then to that indignity, however great, and obey necessity, to which even gods are not superior. Go, consuls, at the cost of arms redeem the City which your sires paid gold to redeem."

V. The consuls then went to confer with Pontius. The victor proposed a treaty, but they declared that a treaty could not be made without the authorization of the people, nor without fetials and the rest of the customary ceremonial. Consequently the Caudine

A.U.C.
433

credunt Claudio^sque etiam scribit, foedere pax Cau-3 dina, sed per sponsonem facta est. Quid enim aut sponsoribus in foedere opus esset aut obsidibus, ubi precatione res transigitur, per quem populum fiat quo minus legibus dictis stetur, ut eum ita Iuppiter
 feriat quemadmodum a fetialibus porcus feriatur?
 4 Spoponderunt consules, legati, quaestores, tribuni militum, nominaque omnium qui spoponderunt ex-stant, ubi, si ex foedere acta res esset, praeterquam 5 duorum fetialium non exstarent; et propter neces-sariam foederis dilationem obsides etiam sescenti equites imperati, qui capite luerent, si pacto non 6 staretur. Tempus inde statutum tradendis obsidibus exercitique inermi mittendo.

Redintegravit luctum in castris consulum adventus,
 ut vix ab iis abstinerent manus quorum temeritate
 in eum locum deducti essent, quorum ignavia foedius 7 inde quam venissent abituri: illis non ducem loco-rum, non exploratorem fuisse; beluarum modo caecos
 8 in foveam missos. Alii alios intueri, contemplari arma mox tradenda et inermes futuras dextras obnoxiaque corpora hosti; proponere sibimet ipsi ante oculos iugum hostile et ludibria victoris et

¹ Q. Claudio^s Quadrigarius Introduction, Vol. I. p. xxx).

² "The sponsio was a verbal engagement or pledge made by those in authority (the generals and, if required, their officers) in answer to a formal question from the other party."—Anderson.

³ See I. xxiv. 8.

Peace was not entered into by means of a treaty, as B.C. 321 people in general believe and as Claudius¹ actually states, but by a guarantee.² For what need would there have been for guarantors or for hostages in a treaty, where the agreement is concluded with a prayer that the nation responsible for any departure from the recited terms may be smitten by Jupiter even as the swine is smitten by the fetials?³ The guarantors were the consuls, the lieutenants, the quaestors, and the tribunes of the soldiers, and the names of all who gave the guarantee are extant, whereas, if the agreement had been entered into as in making a treaty, none would be preserved except those of the two fetials; and because of the inevitable postponement of the treaty, hostages were also required to the number of six hundred knights, whose lives were to be forfeit if the Romans should fail to keep the terms. A time was then set for the delivery of the hostages and the dismissal of the army without their arms.

Fresh lamentations broke out in the camp when the consuls returned; and the men could hardly keep from laying violent hands on those through whose rashness they had been led into that place, and through whose cowardice they were now to depart more shamefully than they had come. They bethought them how they had been unprovided either with guides or with patrols, but had been driven blindly, like wild beasts, into a trap. They looked at one another; they gazed on the arms that they must presently surrender, on the right hands that would be helpless and the bodies that would be at the mercy of the foe. They pictured to their mind's eye the hostile yoke, the victor's taunts,

A.U.C. 9 voltus superbos et per armatos inermium iter, inde 433 foedi agminis miserabilem viam per sociorum urbes, reditum in patriam ad parentes, quo saepe ipsi 10 maioresque eorum triumphantes venissent: se solos sine volnere, sine ferro, sine acie victos; sibi non stringere licuisse gladios, non manum cum hoste conferre; sibi nequiquam arma, nequiquam vires, nequiquam¹ animos datos.

11 Haec frementibus hora fatalis ignominiae advenit, omnia tristiora experiundo factura quam quae prea-12 ceperant animis. Iam primum cum singulis vestimentis inermes extra vallum exire iussi, et primi 13 traditi obsides atque in custodiam abducti. Tum a consulibus abire lictores iussi paludamentaque de-tracta: id tantam² inter ipsos, qui paulo ante eos exsecrantes dedendos lacerandosque censuerant, 14 miserationem fecit, ut suae quisque condicionis
 oblitus ab illa deformatione tantae maiestatis velut
 ab nefando spectaculo averteret oculos.

VI. Primi consules prope seminudi sub iugum missi; tum ut quisque gradu proximus erat ita
 2 ignominiae obiectus; tum deinceps singulae legiones.
 Circumstabant armati hostes, exprobrantes eluden-tesque; gladii etiam plerisque intentati, et vulnerati

¹ sibi nequiquam arma, nequiquam vires, nequiquam
Gelenius: sibe (and in marg. uires nequiquam) nequiquam
M: sibi nequiquam Ω.

² tantam id Drakenborch: tantam Ω.

and fleering countenance ; and how they must pass unarmed between the ranks of their armed enemies, and then wend their wretched way, a pitiful band, through the cities of their allies ; and finally the return to their own city and their parents, whither they themselves and their ancestors had often returned in triumph. They alone had been defeated without a wound, without a weapon, without a battle ; to them it had not been granted to draw the sword, nor to join in combat with the enemy ; on them in vain had arms, in vain had strength, in vain had bravery been bestowed.

As they uttered these complaints, the fateful hour of their humiliation came, an hour destined to transcend all anticipations in the bitterness of its reality. To begin with, they were ordered to pass outside the rampart, clad in their tunics and unarmed, and the hostages were at once handed over and led off into custody. Next, the lictors were commanded to forsake the consuls, who then were stripped of their generals' cloaks,—a thing which inspired such compassion in those very men who a little while before had cursed them and had declared that they deserved to be given up and put to torture, that every man, forgetting his own evil case, averted his eyes from that degradation of so majestic an office, as from a spectacle of horror.

VI. First the consuls, little better than half-naked, were sent under the yoke, then their subordinates were humbled, each in the order of his rank ; and then, one after another, the several legions. The enemy under arms stood on either side, reviling them and mocking them ; many they actually threatened with the sword, and some, whose quidam necatique, si voltus eorum indignitate rerum acrior victorem offendisset.

- 3 Ita traducti sub iugum, et quod paene gravius erat, per hostium oculos, cum e saltu evassisent, etsi velut ab inferis extracti tum primum lucem aspicere visi sunt, tamen ipsa lux ita deforme 4 intuentibus agmen omni morte tristior fuit. Itaque cum ante noctem Capuam pervenire possent, incerti de fide sociorum et quod pudor praepediebat, circa viam haud procul Capua omnium egena corpora 5 humi prostraverunt. Quod ubi est Capuam nuntiatum, evicit miseratio iusta sociorum superbiam in- 6 genitam Campanis. Confestim insignia sua consulibus,¹ arma equos vestimenta commeatus militibus, 7 benigne mittunt; et venientibus Capuam cunctus senatus populusque obviam egressus iustis omnibus hospitalibus privatisque et publicis fungitur officiis. 8 Neque illis sociorum comitas voltusque benigni et adloquia non modo sermonem elicere sed ne ut oculos quidem attollerent aut consolantes amicos 9 contra intuerentur efficere poterant: adeo super maerorem pudor quidam fugere conloquia et coetus hominum cogebat.
- 10 Postero die cum iuvenes nobiles missi a Capua ut proficiscentes ad finem Campanum prosequerentur

¹ consulibus Hertz: consulibus fasces lictores Ω.

resentment of the outrage showing too plainly in their faces gave their conquerors offence, they wounded or slew outright.

Thus they were sent under the yoke, and, what was almost harder to bear, while their enemies looked on. On emerging from the pass, although they seemed like men raised from the dead, who beheld for the first time the light of day, yet the very light itself, which allowed them to see that dismal throng, was gloomier than any death. And so, although it was in their power to have made Capua before night-fall, yet, questioning the loyalty of their allies, and withheld also by shame, they threw themselves upon the ground along the roadside, not far from the city, with nothing to supply their wants. When tidings of this were brought to Capua, a feeling of pity, natural to allies, overcame the ingrained arrogance of the Campanians. Ungrudgingly, without an instant's hesitation, they dispatched the insignia of their office to the consuls, together with arms, horses, clothing, and provisions, for the men ; and as they drew near Capua, the whole senate and people going forth to meet them used towards them all the rites of hospitality and every public and private courtesy. Yet the kindness of their allies and their friendly looks and words were so far from drawing the Romans into talk that they could not even be got to raise their eyes or look their friends and comforters in the face ; so constrained were they by a kind of humiliation—over and above their grief—to avoid the speech and assemblages of men.

On the following day, when the young nobles sent from Capua to attend them to the borders of Campania had returned, and were called into the senate-

A.U.C. 433 11 revertissent vocatique in curiam percontantibus maioribus natu multo sibi maestiores et abiectiores
 animi visos referrent: adeo silens ac prope mutum 12 agmen incessisse; iacere¹ indolem illam Romanam, ablatosque cum armis animos; non reddere salutem
 salutantibus, non dare responsum,² non hiscere quemquam p[re]a metu potuisse, tamquam ferentibus
 adhuc cervicibus iugum sub quod missi³ essent; 13 habere Samnites victoriam non p[re]aclaram solum
 sed etiam perpetuam, cepisse enim eos non Romam,
 A.U.C. 434 sicut ante Gallos, sed, quod multo bellicosius fuerit, Romanam virtutem ferociamque.—VII. cum haec
 dicerentur audirenturque et deploratum paene
 Romanum nomen in concilio sociorum fidelium esset,
 2 dicitur A. Calavius,⁴ Ovi filius, clarus genere factisque, tum etiam aetate verendus, longe aliter
 3 se habere rem dixisse: silentium illud obstinatum fixosque in terram oculos et surdas ad omnia solacia
 aures et pudorem intuendae lucis ingentem molem
 4 irarum ex alto animi⁵ crientis indicia esse. Aut
 Romana se ignorare ingenia, aut silentium illud Samnitibus flebiles brevi clamores gemitusque excitaturum, Caudinaeque pacis aliquanto Samnitibus
 5 quam Romanis tristior[um] memoriam fore; quippe suos quemque eorum animos habiturum, ubicumque congressuri sint; saltus Caudinos non ubique Samnitibus fore.

6 Iam Romae etiam⁶ sua infamis clades erat. Ob-

¹ iacere ζ : tacere Ω .

² salutantibus, non dare responsum Madrig: non salutan-tibus dare responsum Ω : bracketed by Conway.

³ quod missi Fz A^xz: quod emissi (or quo demissi) Ω .

⁴ A. Calavius Conway: Ofilius (or Ofilius) A. Calauius (or acalauius or accilanius or other corruptions) Ω .

⁵ animi U₅: animo Ω .

house and questioned by the elders, they reported ^{B.C. 321} that they had seemed to be much more sorrowful and dejected than before : their column had marched on in silence and almost as though dumb ; the old Roman spirit was quite dashed ; they had lost their courage with their arms ; being saluted, they returned not the salutation ; they responded to no questions ; not a man of them had been able to open his mouth for shame, as if they still bore on their necks the yoke under which they had been sent ; the Samnites had won not only a famous but a lasting victory, for they had conquered, not Rome—as the Gauls had done before—but a thing which demanded far greater prowess—the Roman valour and independence. VII. Such were the opinions that were spoken ^{B.C. 320} and listened to, and the Roman name had well-nigh been given up for lost in the council of Rome's faithful allies, when Aulus Calavius, son of Ovius, a man of famous birth and achievements and at that time venerable also for his age, asserted that the case was very different : that obstinate silence, those eyes fixed on the ground and ears deaf to every consolation, that shame at looking on the light, were signs, he argued, of bosoms bursting with passionate resentment ; either he knew nothing of the Roman character, or that silence was destined ere long to draw from the Samnites cries and groans of anguish, and the Caudine Peace to become a far more bitter memory to Samnites than to Romans ; for each people would have its own native spirit wherever they might encounter, but the Samnites would not everywhere have a Caudine Pass.

By this time Rome, too, had heard of her shameful

⁶ Romae etiam Drakenborch : Romae et Ω. Romae & M.

sessos primum audierunt; tristior deinde ignominiosae
 7 pacis magis quam periculi nuntius fuit. Ad famam obsidionis dilectus haber coeptus erat; dimissus deinde auxiliorum apparatus, postquam deditioem
 tam foede factam acceperunt, extemploque sine ulla publica auctoritate consensum in omnem formam 8 luctus est. Tabernae circa forum clausae, iustitiumque in foro sua sponte coeptum prius quam indictum;
 9 lati clavi, anuli aurei positi; paene maestior exercitu ipso civitas esse; nec ducibus solum atque auctoribus
 sponsoribusque pacis irasci sed innoxios etiam milites 10 odisse et negare urbe tectisve accipiendos. Quam concitationem animorum fregit adventus exercitus etiam iratis miserabilis. Non enim tamquam in patriam revertentes ex insperato incolumes sed capto-11 rum habitu voltuque ingressi sero in urbem ita se in suis quisque tectis abdiderunt ut postero atque
 insequentibus diebus nemo eorum forum aut publi-12 cum aspicere vellet. Consules in privato abditi nihil pro magistratu agere, nisi quod expressum senatus
 consulto est ut dictatorem dicerent comitorum
 13 causa. Q. Fabium Ambustum dixerunt et P. Aelium
 14 Paetum¹ magistrum equitum; quibus vitio creatis

¹ Aelium Paetum Σ: ae (e-) milium paetum Λ.

¹ The latus clarus, a broad (purple) stripe in the tunic, marked the senator. Both senators and knights wore golden rings, though these later became the distinguishing badge of the knights.

calamity. The first news was that the army was entrapped; then came a gloomier report, more by reason of the disgraceful peace than because of the peril. On the rumour of a blockade they had begun to hold a levy; but they afterwards gave over their measures for relief, when they learned that there had been so infamous a capitulation, and immediately, without official sanction of any sort, betook themselves with one mind to every form of mourning. The booths round about the Forum were shut up, and ere proclamation could be made, all business was suspended; tunics with the broad stripe of purple were discarded, as were golden rings.¹ The citizens were almost more dejected than the army; and not only were they enraged against their generals and those who had favoured and guaranteed the peace, but they even visited their hate upon the innocent soldiers and proposed to exclude them from the City and from their homes. But this flurry of resentment was dispelled by the arrival of the army, which even angry men could not but pity. For they came not like men returning in safety to their homes, after all hope of them had been abandoned; but entering the City late in the day, with the bearing and looks of prisoners, they slipped away every man to his own house, and on the next and the succeeding days not one of them would look into the Forum or the streets. The consuls shut themselves up in their houses and would transact no public business, except that they were forced by a senatorial decree to name a dictator to preside at the election. They designated Quintus Fabius Ambustus, with Publius Aelius Paetus to be master of the horse. A flaw in their appointment occasioned the substitution in their suffecti M. Aemilius Papus dictator. L. Valerius Flaccus magister equitum. Nec per eos comitia habita; et quia taedebat populum omnium magistratum eius anni, res ad interregnum rediit. Interreges Q. Fabius Maximus M. Valerius Corvus. Is consules creavit Q. Publilium Philonem tertium¹ et L. Papirium Cursorem iterum haud dubio consensu civitatis, quod nulli ea tempestate duces clariores essent.

VIII. Quo creati sunt die, eo—sic enim placuerat patribus—magistratum inierunt sollemnibusque senatus consultis perfectis de pace Caudina rettulerunt; 2 et Publilius, penes quem fasces erant, “Dic, Sp. Postumi,” inquit. Qui ubi surrexit, eodem illo vultu 3 quo sub iugum missus erat, “Haud sum ignarus” inquit, “consules, ignominiae non honoris causa me primum excitatum iussumque dicere, non tamquam senatorem, sed tamquam reum qua infelicis belli, qua 4 ignominiosae pacis. Ego tamen, quando neque de noxa nostra neque de poena rettulisti, omissa defensione, quae non difficillima esset apud haud ignaros fortunarum humanarum necessitatiumque, sententiam de eo de quo rettulisti paucis peragam; quae sententia testis erit mihi ne an legionibus vestris pepercerim, cum me seu turpi seu necessaria sponroom of Marcus Aemilius Papus, as dictator, and ^{B.C. 320} Lucius Valerius Flaccus, as master of the horse. However, even they did not hold an election; and because the people were dissatisfied with all the magistrates of that year, the state reverted to an interregnum. The interreges were Quintus Fabius Maximus and Marcus Valerius Corvus. The latter announced the election to the consulship of Quintus Publilius Philo (for the third time) and Lucius Papirius Cursor (for the second) with the unmistakable approval of the citizens, for there were at that time no leaders more distinguished.

¹ Q. Publilium Philonem tertium Glareanus: Q. Publilium Philonem Ω.

¹ The fasces (bundles of rods, symbolic of supreme authority) were borne by the lictors in alternate attendance on the two consuls. The elder had them first.

VIII. On the day of their election—for so the Fathers had ordained—they entered upon the duties of their magistracy, and having disposed of the routine resolutions, raised the question of the Caudine Peace. Publilius had the fasces,¹ and called on Spurius Postumius to speak. Having risen to his feet, he said, with the same expression on his countenance as when he had been sent under the yoke, “I am not ignorant, consuls, that I have been called on first and bidden to speak because of my disgrace, and not to honour me; not as a senator, but as one charged with the guilt not only of an unlucky war but of a shameful peace. However, you have not raised the question of our wrong-doing or our punishment; I will therefore attempt no defence—though it should be no difficult cause to plead before judges not unacquainted with the fortunes of men and their necessities—but will briefly formulate a motion concerning the subject you have asked us to consider. My motion will bear witness whether it was myself or your legions that I spared, when I bound myself by a base, or, perhaps,

A.U.C. 434 5 sione obstrinxi; qua tamen, quando iniussu populi
facta est, non tenetur populus Romanus, nec quicquam ex ea praeterquam corpora nostra debentur 6 Samnitibus. Dedamur per fetiales nudi vinclique; exsolvamus religione populum, si qua obligavimus,
ne quid divini humanive obstet quo minus iustum
7 piumque de integro ineatur bellum. Interea consules exercitum scribere, armare, educere placet, nec prius ingredi hostium fines, quam omnia iusta 8 in dditionem nostram¹ perfecta erunt. Vos, di immortales, precor quaesoque, si vobis non fuit cordi
Sp. Postumium T. Veturium consules cum Samnitibus 9 prospere bellum gerere, at vos satis habeatis vidisse nos sub iugum missos, vidisse sponsione infami
obligatos, videre nudos vinclisque hostibus deditos,
omnem iram hostium nostris capitibus excipientes;
10 novos consules legionesque Romanas ita cum Samnite gerere bellum velitis ut omnia ante nos consules bella gesta sunt."

11 Quae ubi dixit, tanta simul admiratio miseratioque
viri incessit homines ut modo vix crederent illum eundem esse Sp. Postumium qui auctor tam foedae 12 pacis fuisset; modo miserarentur quod vir talis etiam praecipuum apud hostes supplicium passurus esset
13 ob iram dirempta pacis. Cum omnes laudibus modo

¹ dditionem nostram Ω: dditionem nostra TDA: diditione nostra L.

a necessary pledge,—by which, however, the Roman B.C. 320 People is not held, since it was given without the people's authorization : nor by its terms is aught but our own persons due to the Samnites. Let us be given up, I propose, by the fetials, stripped and bound ; let us release the people from their religious obligation, if in any such we have involved them, that no obstacle, divine or human, may block the way to a just and righteous renewal of the war. Meantime I move that the consuls enroll an army and arm it and lead it forth, yet without crossing the borders of the enemy, until all the ceremonies incident to our surrender shall have been completed. Do you, immortal gods, I beseech and pray you, if you were not pleased that the consuls Spurius Postumius and Titus Veturius should wage a successful war with the Samnites, yet deem it enough to have seen us sent beneath the yoke, to have seen us bound by an infamous agreement, to behold us, naked and in bonds, delivered to the enemy, receiving on our own heads all the resentment of our foes ; and vouchsafe to the new consuls and the Roman legions so to wage war with the Samnites, as, until our consulship, all Rome's wars were waged."

When he had finished speaking, such a thrill of astonishment, and at the same time of pity for the man, ran through the senate, that at first men could hardly believe it was the same Spurius Postumius who had been the author of a peace so shameful ; and presently they were all compassion, to think that such a man should suffer what would be no ordinary punishment at the hands of enemies enraged by the rupture of the peace. As they

A.U.C. prosequentes virum in sententiam eius pedibus irent, ⁴³⁴ 14 temptata paulisper intercessio est ab L. Livio et Q.
 Maelio tribunis plebis, qui neque exsolvi religione populum aiebant ditione sua, nisi omnia Samni-tibus, qualia apud Caudium fuissent, restituerentur; 15 neque se pro eo quod spondendo pacem servassent
 exercitum populi Romani poenam ullam meritos esse;
 neque ad extremum, cum sacrosancti essent, dedi-
 hostibus violarive posse.¹

IX. Tum Postumius "Interea dedit" inquit "pro-fanos nos, quos salva religione potestis; dedetis deinde et istos sacrosanctos, cum primum magistratu-2 abierint, sed, si me audiatis, priusquam dedantur, hic
 in comitio virginis caesos, hanc iam ut intercalatae 3 poenae usuram habeant. Nam quod ditione nostra negant exsolvi religione populum, id istos magisne dedantur quam quia ita se res habeat dicere, quis 4 adeo iuris fetialium expers est qui ignoret? Neque ego infitias eo, patres conscripti, tam sponsiones²
 quam foedera sancta esse apud eos homines apud
 quos iuxta divinas religiones fides humana coli-
 tur; sed iniussu populi nego quicquam sanciri posse
 5 quod populum teneat. An, si eadem superbia qua sponzionem istam expresserunt nobis Samnites coegi-

¹ posse, ζ : posset MPT: possent Ω.

² sponsiones, ζ : sponsores Ω.

¹ Livius and Maelius are apparently thought of as having been among the guarantors and as having afterwards been elected plebeian tribunes.

were all crossing over to support his motion, with nothing but praises for his heroism, Lucius Livius and Quintus Maelius, tribunes of the plebs, endeavoured for a moment to interpose their veto. The people, they said, could not be freed from their obligation by surrendering them, unless every advantage which the Samnites had possessed at Caudium were restored to them; moreover, they had merited no punishment for having preserved by their pledge of peace the army of the Roman People; nor, finally, seeing that they were sacrosanct, could they be surrendered to the enemy or violated.¹

IX. Then said Postumius: "Meanwhile, surrender us, who are unconsecrate, as you may do without offence to Heaven; afterwards you shall surrender also those sacrosanct ones, when once they have retired from their magistracy; but, if you should listen to me, before surrendering them you would have them scourged here in the Comitium, that they might receive in advance this extra punishment, by way of interest. For when they deny that the people can be freed of their obligation by surrendering us, who is so unacquainted with the fetial law as not to be aware that they say this, more that they may not be surrendered than because the case is so? And yet, Conscription Fathers, I do not dispute the fact that guarantees as well as treaties are sacred in the eyes of those who cherish honour among men on an equal footing with obligations due to the gods; but I deny that without the people's authorization any sanction can be given which shall be binding on the people. What! If the Samnites with that same arrogance with which they extorted this capitulation from us had com-

sent nos verba legitima dedentium urbes nuncupare, deditum populum Romanum vos tribuni diceretis et hanc urbem templa delubra fines aquas Samnitium
 6 esse? Omitto dditionem, quoniam de sponsione agitur; quid tandem si spoondissemus urbem hanc relictum populum Romanum? si incensurum? si
 magistratus, si senatum, si leges non habiturum? si 7 sub regibus futurum? Di meliora, inquis. Atqui non indignitas rerum sponsionis vinculum levat: si
 quid est in quod¹ obligari populus possit, in omnia potest. Et ne illud quidem, quod quosdam forsitan moveat, refert, consul an dictator an praetor spopon-
 s derit. Et hoc ipsi etiam Samnites iudicaverunt, quibus non fuit satis consules spondere, sed legatos,
 quaestores, tribunos militum spondere coegerunt.

9 “Nec a me nunc quisquam quaesiverit quid ita spoponderim, cum id nec consulis ius esset nec illis
 spondere pacem quae mei non erat arbitrii, nec pro 10 vobis qui nihil mandaveratis possem. Nihil ad Caudium, patres conscripti, humanis consiliis gestum est:
 di immortales et vestris et hostium imperatoribus 11 mentem ademerunt. Nec nos in bello satis caviimus, et illi male partam victoriam male perdiderunt, dum
 vix locis quibus vicerant credunt, dum quacumque

¹ quod, : quo Δ .

elled us to pronounce the solemn form of words B.C. 320 of those who surrender cities, would you tribunes assert that the Roman People had been surrendered, and that this City, with its temples, its holy places, its bounds and waters, was become the property of the Samnites? But enough of surrender; we are talking of a guarantee. How, pray, if we had guaranteed that the Roman People should forsake this City? that they should burn it? that it should cease to have magistrates, a senate, laws? that it should be subject to the rule of kings? ‘The gods forbid!’ you say. And yet the unworthiness of the conditions cannot lessen the force of a guarantee; if there is anything for which the people can be bound, it can be bound for everything. Nor does it matter, either, as some are perhaps inclined to think, whether consul or dictator or praetor have given the guarantee. And this the very Samnites themselves deemed to be true, for not content with the guarantee of consuls, they obliged the lieutenants, the quaestors, and the tribunes of the soldiers to add theirs.

“And let no man now demand of me why I gave this guarantee, seeing that a consul has no right so to do and that I could not pledge them a peace which was not mine to grant, nor in your behalf, who had given me no mandate. There was nothing done at Caudium, Conscript Fathers, by man’s wisdom: the immortal gods deprived of understanding both your commanders and the enemy’s. We, on our part, took no sufficient precautions in the war: while, as for them, they threw away their ill-got victory by their ill-guided conduct, for they hardly trusted the very ground that had given them

LIVY

A.U.C. condicione arma viris in arma natis auferre festinant.
⁴³⁴ 12 An, si sana mens fuisset, difficile illis fuit, dum senes
 ab domo ad consultandum accersunt, mittere Romam
 legatos? cum senatu, cum populo de pace ac foedere 13 agere? Tridui iter expeditis erat; interea in indutiis res fuisset, donec ab Roma legati aut victoriam illis certam aut pacem adferrent. Ea demum sponsio 14 esset quam populi iussu spoondissemus. Sed neque vos tulissetis nec nos spoondissemus; nec fas fuit
 alium rerum exitum esse quam ut illi velut somnio Jaetiore quam quod mentes eorum capere possent 15 neququam eluderentur et nostrum exercitum eadem quae impedierat fortuna expediret, vanam victoriam
 vanior inritam faceret pax, sponsio interponeretur 16 quae neminem praeter sponsorem obligaret. Quid enim vobiscum, patres conscripti, quid cum populo Romano actum est? Quis vos appellare potest, quis se a vobis dicere deceptum? Hostis an civis? Hosti
 nihil spoondistis, civem¹ neminem spondere pro 17 vobis iussistis. Nihil ergo vobis nec nobiscum est, quibus nihil mandastis, nec cum Samnitibus, cum 18 quibus nihil egistis. Samnitibus sponsores nos sumus rei satis locupletes in id quod nostrum est, in id quod praestare possumus, corpora nostra et animos;

¹ civem A³: quem Ω: quin U: qui F³.

¹ Victory, in case the Roman People declined to accept terms for the ransom of their army; peace, if they acceded to those terms.

their conquest, in their haste to deprive of arms, on B.C. 320 any terms, men born to the use of arms. Why, had they had their wits about them, would it have been hard, while summoning old men from home for consultation, to dispatch envoys to Rome? to treat with senate and with people for a peace and covenant? It was only three days' journey to those who travel light; meantime hostilities would have been suspended, until their envoys should return from Rome with either certain victory or a peace.¹ Then, and then only, would there have been a guarantee in which our pledge was backed by the mandate of the people. But neither would you have voted one, nor should we have given it; nor was it Heaven's will that the affair should have any other ending, but that they should be beguiled with a dream too joyful for their comprehension, and that our army should be extricated by the same fortune which had entrapped it; that their idle victory should evaporate in a yet idler peace, and a guarantee be proffered that should bind none but the guarantor. For what negotiation, Conscription Fathers, has there been with you or with the Roman People? Who can appeal to you, who can say that he has been deceived by you? Can the enemy, can a fellow-citizen? You have pledged nothing to the enemy, you have given no authority to make a pledge to any fellow-citizen. You have therefore naught to do with us, to whom you gave no mandate, or with the Samnites, with whom you have had no dealings. The Samnites have in us guarantors who are responsible and quite competent, so far as concerns what belongs to ourselves and what we are able to deliver, namely, our persons and our lives; against these let 434 in haec saeviant, in haec ferrum, in haec iras acuant.

A.U.C.

19 Quod ad tribunos attinet, consulite utrum praesens deditio eorum fieri possit an in diem differatur; nos interim, T. Veturi vosque ceteri, vilia haec capita luendae sponzionis¹ feramus et nostro suppicio liberemus Romana arma."

X. Movit patres conscriptos cum causa tum auctor nec ceteros solum sed tribunos etiam plebei, ut se 2 in senatus dicerent fore potestate. Magistratu inde se extemplo abdicaverunt traditique fetialibus cum ceteris Caudium ducendi. Hoc senatus consulto 3 facto lux quaedam adfulsisse civitati visa est. Postumius in ore erat; eum laudibus ad caelum ferebant, devotioni P. Deci consulis, aliis claris facinoribus 4 aequabant: emersisse civitatem ex obnoxia pace illius consilio et opera; ipsum se cruciatibus et hostium irae offerre piaculaque pro populo Romano 5 dare. Arma cuncti spectant et bellum: en unquam futurum ut congregdi armatis cum Samnite liceat?

6 In civitate ira odioque ardente dilectus prope omnium voluntariorum fuit. Rescriptae ex eodem milite novae legiones ductusque ad Caudium exercitus. Praegressi fetiales ubi ad portam venere, vestem detrahi pacis sponsoribus iubent, manus post tergum vinciri. Cum apparitor verecundia maiestatis Postumi laxe vinciret, "Quin tu" inquit "adduces²

¹ sponzionis Ω: sponzioni Σ edd.

² adduces Ω: adducis (or adduce) Σ.

them storm, against these direct their swords, against these make sharp their anger. As for the tribunes, you must determine whether their surrender can take place at once or had better be deferred; meantime, Titus Veturius, let us, and you others, offer these caitiff heads of ours in satisfaction of our pledge, and by our suffering liberate the Roman arms."

X. Both the cause itself and the speaker greatly stirred the Conscription Fathers and the others present, including even the tribunes of the plebs, who declared that they would obey the senate, and having forthwith resigned their office were delivered over to the fetials to be led with the rest to Caudium. When the senate had acted on this motion, it somehow seemed as though day had dawned upon the State. Postumius was on all men's lips; they extolled him to the skies, and compared his conduct to the devotion of Publius Decius, the consul,¹ and to other glorious deeds. The state, they said, had emerged—thanks to his wisdom and his services—from a slavish peace; he was freely giving himself up to the tortures of a resentful foe, that he might make expiation for the Roman People. Men thought of nothing but war and arms. Would ever the hour come, they asked, when they might encounter the Samnites, sword in hand?

In a city ablaze with wrath and hate, the levy was almost wholly made up with volunteers. The same soldiers were enrolled into new legions, and the army marched on Caudium. Before them went the fetials, who, when they had come to the gate, bade the guarantors of peace be stripped and their hands be bound behind their backs. As the officer, awed by the dignity of Postumius, would have left him loosely

A.U.C. 8 lorum, ut iusta fiat deditio!" Tum ubi in coetum
 434 Samnitium et ad tribunal ventum Ponti est, A. Cornelius Arvina fetialis ita verba fecit: "Quandoque hisce homines iniussu populi Romani Quiritium foedus ictum iri spoponderunt atque ob eam rem noxam nocuerunt, ob eam rem quo populus Romanus scelere impio sit solitus hosce homines vobis dedo." 10 Haec dicenti fetiali Postumius genu femur quanta maxime poterat vi perculit et clara voce ait se Samnitem civem esse, illum legatum¹ a se contra ius gentium violatum: eo iustius bellum gesturos.

XI. Tum Pontius "Nec ego istam deditio[n]em accipiam" inquit, "nec Samnites ratam habebunt. 2 Quin tu, Spuri Postumi, si deos esse censes, aut omnia inrita facis aut pacto stas? Samniti populo omnes quos in potestate habuit aut pro iis pax 3 debetur. Sed quid ego te appello, qui te captum victori cum qua potes fide restituis? Populum Romanum appello; quem si sponsonis ad furculas Caudinas factae paenitet, restituat legiones intra 4 saltum quo saeptae fuerunt. Nemo quemquam deceperit; omnia pro infecto sint; recipient arma, quae per pactionem tradiderunt; redeant in castra sua; quidquid pridie habuerunt quam in conloquium est ventum habeant: tum bellum et fortia consilia 5 placeant, tum sponsio et pax repudietur. Ea fortuna, bound, “ Nay, draw the thong tight,” he exclaimed, B.C. 320 “ that the surrender may be duly carried out.” Then, on arriving at the assembly of the Samnites and the tribune of Pontius, Aulus Cornelius Arvina the fetial¹ spoke as follows: “ Whereas these men, unbidden by the Roman People of the Quirites, have guaranteed that a treaty should be ratified, and by so doing have committed an injury; to the end that the Roman People may be absolved of heinous guilt, I deliver up these men to you.” As the fetial spoke these words, Postumius thrust his knee into the other’s thigh, with all the force he could summon up, and proclaimed in a loud voice that he was a Samnite citizen, who had maltreated the envoy in violation of the law of nations, whereby the Romans would make war with the better right.

¹ legatum Walters and Conway: legatum fetialem Ω.

¹ i.e. the pater patratus, see I. xxiv. 6.

XI. Then said Pontius, “ I will not receive this surrender, nor will the Samnites hold it valid. And you, Spurius Postumius, if you believe in the existence of the gods, why not either reject the whole negotiation or abide by your agreement? The Samnite People is entitled to all whom it had in its power, or to peace in place of them. But why do I appeal to you, who yield yourself a prisoner as honourably as you can? I appeal to the Roman People ; if they repent them of the pledge that was given at the Caudine Forks, let them replace their legions in the defile where they were surrounded. Let no one deceive anybody ; let all be as though it had not happened ; let them resume the arms they laid down in accordance with the compact ; let them go back to their camp ; whatever they had on the day before the conference, let them have again ; then let them vote for war and warlike measures, then let iis¹ locis, quae ante pacis mentionem habuimus, geramus bellum, nec populus Romanus consulum sponzionem nec nos fidem populi Romani accusemus.

6 Nunquamne causa defiet cur victi pacto non stetis? Obsides Porsinnae dedistis: furto eos subduxistis; auro civitatem a Gallis redemistis: inter accipiendum

7 aurum caesi sunt; pacem nobiscum pepigistis, ut legiones vobis captas restitueremus: eam pacem inritam facitis. Et semper aliquam fraudi speciem

8 iuris imponitis. Non probat populus Romanus ignominiosa pace legiones servatas? Pacem sibi habeat, legiones captas victori restituat; hoc fide, hoc foederibus, hoc fetialibus caerimoniis dignum erat.

9 Ut quidem tu quod petisti per pactionem habeas, tot cives incolumes, ego pacem quam hos tibi remittendo pactus sum non habeam, hoc tu, A. Cornelii, hoc vos, fetiales, iuris gentibus dicitis?

10 "Ego vero istos quos dedi simulatis nec accipio nec dedi arbitror, nec moror quo minus in civitatem obligatam² sponsione commissa iratis omnibus dis,

11 quorum eluditur numen, redeant. Gerite bellum, quando Sp. Postumius modo legatum³ genu percultit. Ita di credent Samnitem civem Postumium, non ci-

¹ iis ξ : his (hiis A) Ω .

² obligatam F³A^x: oblectam (or other corruptions) Ω : convictam Walters.

³ legatum Walters and Conway: legatum fetialem (or feci) Ω .

¹ An allusion to the Cloelia episode, II. xiii. 6-11.

² v. xlvi-xlix.

them reject the guarantee and the peace ! Let us B.C. 320 fight it out in those circumstances, and in those positions, which were ours before peace was mentioned ; let the Roman People not blame the pledge given by the consuls, nor let us blame the honour of the Roman People. Will you never, when you have been beaten, lack excuses for not holding to your covenants ? You gave hostages to Porsinna
 —and withdrew them by a trick.¹ You ransomed
 your City from the Gauls with gold—and cut them down as they were receiving the gold.² You pledged us peace, on condition that we gave you back your captured legions—and you nullify the peace. And always you contrive to give the fraud some colour of legality. Does the Roman People not approve the preservation of its legions by a disgraceful peace ?
 Let it keep its peace, and give back the captured legions to the victor ; that would be conduct worthy of its promise, its covenants, its fetial ceremonies.
 That you, on your side, should have what you aimed at in your compact, the safety of these many citizens, but that I should not have the peace I stipulated for,
 when I released them,—is this the judgment which you, Aulus Cornelius, and you, fetials, render to the nations ?

“ As for me, I will none of these whom you pretend to be surrendering, nor do I deem them to be surrendered, neither do I stand in the way of their returning, despite the wrath of all the gods, whose divinity they have made a mock, to the City which is committed by their guarantee. Aye, go to war, since Spurius Postumius has just now jostled
 the envoy with his knee ! So shall the gods believe that Postumius is a Samnite—not a Roman—citizen, vem Romanum esse, et a Samnite legatum Romanum violatum: eo vobis iustum in nos factum esse bellum.

12 Haec ludibria religionum non pudere in lucem proferre et vix pueris dignas ambages senes ac consulares fallendae fidei exquirere! I, lictor, deme vincla Romanis; moratus sit nemo, quo minus ubi visum fuerit abeant." Et illi quidem, forsitan et publica, sua certe liberata fide ab Caudio in castra Romana inviolati redierunt.

XII. Samnitibus pro superba pace infestissimum cernentibus renatum bellum, omnia¹ quae deinde evenerunt non in animis solum sed prope in oculis 2 esse; et sero ac neququam laudare senis Ponti utraque consilia, inter quae se media lapsos via² victoriae possessionem pace incerta mutasse; et beneficii et maleficii occasione amissa pugnatores cum eis quos potuerint in perpetuum vel inimicos 3 tollere vel amicos facere. Adeoque nullodum certamine inclinatis viribus post Caudinam pacem animi mutaverant, ut clariorem inter Romanos deditio Postumium quam Pontium incruenta victoria inter 4 Samnites faceret, et geri posse bellum Romani pro victoria certa haberent, Samnites simul rebellasse et viciisse crederent Romanum.

¹ omnia ζ: omniaque Ω.

² media lapsos via Doujat (Madrig): media lapsos Ω: medio lapsos Perizonius.

and that a Roman envoy has been maltreated by a Samnite, and that you, in consequence of this, have justly made war on us! Does it not shame you to bring forth into the light of day these mockeries of religion, and, old men and consulars as you are, to devise such quibbles to evade your promise as were scarce worthy of children? Go, lictor, strike their fetters from the Romans; let no man hinder them from departing when they list." And the guarantors, released it may be from the nation's pledge, but at all events from their own, returned from Caudium, inviolate, to the Roman camp.

XII. The Samnites now perceived that instead of their domineering peace they were confronted with the renewal of a most bitter war, and not only imagined but almost saw all the consequences which afterwards proceeded from it. Too late and all in vain did they praise the alternative policies suggested by the aged Pontius, between which they had fallen, and exchanged a victory already in their possession for an uncertain peace; they had let slip the opportunity both of doing good and of doing harm, and were going to fight with men whom they might permanently have removed from their path, as enemies, or have made their permanent friends. And though there had so far been no battle since the Caudine Peace to give an advantage to either side, yet such a change of feeling had come about that Postumius enjoyed more fame among the Romans for his surrender than did Pontius among the Samnites for his bloodless victory; and while the Romans regarded their being able to make war as certain victory, the Samnites felt that the Romans had at one and the same moment renewed the war and won it.

LIVY

A.U.C. 5 Inter haec Satricani ad Samnites defecerunt, et 434 Fregellae colonia necopinato adventu Samnitium—fuisse et Satricanos cum iis satis constat—nocte occupata est. Timor inde mutuus utrosque usque 6 ad lucem quietos tenuit; lux pugnae initium fuit, quam aliquamdiu aequam et quia pro aris ac focis
 dimicabatur et quia ex tectis adiuvabat imbellis 7 multitudo tamen¹ Fregellani sustinuerunt. Fraus deinde rem inclinavit, quod vocem audiri praeconis
 passi sunt, incolumem abitum qui arma posuisset.
 Ea spes remisit a certamine animos, et passim arma
 8 iactari coepit. Pertinacior pars armata per aversam portam erupit, tutiorque eis audacia fuit quam in-cautus ad credendum ceteris pavor, quos circumdatos
 igni nequiquam deos fidemque invocantes Samnites concremaverunt.

9 Consules inter se partiti provincias, Papirius in Apuliam ad Luceriam pergit, ubi equites Romani obsides ad Caudium dati custodiebantur, Publilius
 in Samnio substitut adversus Caudinas legiones.
 10 Distendit ea res Samnitium animos, quod nec ad
 Luceriam ire, ne ab tergo instaret hostis, nec
 manere, ne Luceria interim amitteretur, satis aude-11 bant. Optimum visum est committere rem fortunae

¹ multitudo tamen Ω; multitudo certamen (or multitudo) Madrig.

Meanwhile the Satricans revolted to the Samnites, B.C. 320 and the colony of Fregellae, in a surprise attack by the Samnites—accompanied, it would seem, by people from Satricum—was seized during the night. Mutual fear then caused both sides to remain quiet until the morning, when the light ushered in a battle which for a long time was equally sustained—for the townsfolk were fighting for their hearths and altars and a throng of those unfit for arms gave them assistance from the housetops,—still, the people of Fregellae held their own, until presently a ruse decided the victory; for they permitted a herald to be heard, who promised safety to any who laid down his arms. The hope of this relaxed the tension of their courage and on every side they began throwing their arms away. The more determined portion of them retained their weapons and burst out by the opposite gate, and their boldness stood them in better stead than did their too credulous timidity the others; for these the Samnites compassed about with fire, and, despite their appeals to Heaven and to the promise of their captors, burnt them alive.

The consuls having divided the provinces between them, Papirius took his way into Apulia towards Luceria, where the Roman knights given up at Caudium for hostages were being guarded, while Publilius stopped behind in Samnium to oppose the Caudine legions. This plan distracted the minds of the Samnites, since they neither dared move towards Luceria, lest they should bring the enemy down upon their rear, nor remain where they were, for fear that Luceria would meanwhile be lost. The best course seemed to be to entrust their cause to et transigere cum Publilio certamen ; itaque in aciem copias educunt.

LIVY

A.U.C.
434

XIII. Adversus quos Publilius consul cum dimicaturus esset, prius adloquendos milites ratus conditionem advocari iussit. Ceterum sicut ingenti alacritate ad praetorium concursum est, ita prae clamore poscentium pugnam nulla adhortatio imperatoris audita est : suus cuique animus memor ignominiae adhortator aderat. Vadunt igitur in proelium urgentes signiferos, et ne mora in concursu pilis emittendis stringendisque inde gladiis esset, pila velut dato ad id signo abiciunt strictisque gladiis cursu in hostem feruntur. Nihil illie imperatoriae artis ordinibus aut subsidiis locandis fuit : omnia ira militaris prope vesano impetu egit. Itaque non fuso modo hostes sunt, sed ne castris quidem suis fugam impedire¹ ausi Apuliam dissipati petiere ; Luceriam tamen coacto rursus in unum agmine est perventum. Romanos ira eadem quae per medium aciem hostium tulerat et in castra pertulit. Ibi plus quam in acie sanguinis ac caedis factum praedaeque pars maior ira corrupta.

Ex exercitus alter cum Papirio consule locis maritimis pervenerat Arpos per omnia pacata Samnitium magis iniuriis et odio quam beneficio ullo populi Romani ;

¹ impedire ο : inhibere Madvig.

Fortune and fight it out with Publilius. They accordingly formed up in line of battle.

XIII. Publilius the consul was ready to engage them, but thinking it best to encourage his soldiers first, he bade summon them to an assembly. But though they came running to the praetorium with vast alacrity, yet the outcry of those who demanded battle was so loud that the general's exhortation could not be heard; still, every man's own heart, remembering the late humiliation, was there to exhort him. So they went forward into battle, urging on their standard-bearers; and, that there might be no delay in coming to grips while they were discharging their javelins and drawing their swords, they threw away their javelins, as if a signal had been given them, and, sword in hand, pushed forward at the double against the enemy. No tactical skill was there employed in ranging centuries or reserves: the wrath of the soldiers swept everything along in its mad rush. And so not only were the Samnites routed, but not daring to interrupt their flight even at their camp, they dispersed and struck out for Apulia; yet they afterwards rallied again and came to Luceria in one body. The same fury that took the Romans through their enemy's battle-line, carried them also into his camp. There was more bloodshed and carnage there than in the battle, and the greater part of the booty was destroyed in anger.

The other army, under the consul Papirius, marching along the coast as far as Arpi, had found all peaceably disposed, more because of the wrongs done by the Samnites and the hatred they had engendered than owing to any favour shown by the

A.U.C. 434 7 nam Samnites, ea tempestate in montibus vicatim
 habitantes, campestria et maritima loca contempto¹
 cultorum molliore atque, ut evenit fere, locis simili
 genere ipsi montani atque agrestes depopulabantur.
 8 Quae regio si fida Samnitibus fuisset, aut pervenire Arpos exercitus Romanus nequisset, aut interiecta
 penuria² rerum omnium exclusos a commeatibus
 9 absumpsisset. Tum quoque profectos inde ad Luceriam, iuxta obsidentes obsessosque, inopia vexavit. Omnia ab Arpis Romanis suppeditabantur, ceterum adeo exigue ut militi occupato stationibus
 vigiliisque et opere eques folliculis in castra ab
 10 Arpis frumentum veheret, interdum occursu hostium cogeretur abiecto ex equo frumento-pugnare. Ob-sessis priusquam alter consul victore exercitu ad-
 venit, et commeatus ex montibus Samnitium inventi 11 erant et auxilia intromissa. Artiora omnia adventus Publili fecit, qui obsidione delegata in curam collegae
 vacuus³ per agros cuncta infesta commeatibus hostium 12 fecerat. Itaque cum spes nulla esset diutius obsessos inopiam laturos, coacti Samnites, qui ad Luceriam castra habebant, undique contractis viribus signa cum Papirio conferre.

XIV. Per id tempus parantibus utrisque se ad

¹ contempto A⁵ : contempta M : contemptu Ω

² interiecta penuria Tan. Faber (Walters and Conway) :
 interiecta inter Romain et Arpos penuria Ω.

³ vacuus Ω : uacuos A¹ (or A²) : uacuis U : uagus Duker (Maderig).

Roman People. For the Samnites, who in those days dwelt in villages among the mountains, used to ravage the regions of the plain and coast, despising their cultivators, who were of a softer character, and one that—as often happens—resembled their country, while they themselves were rude highlanders. If this district had been faithful to the Samnites, it would either have been impossible for a Roman army to have got as far as Arpi, or the utterly barren nature of the intervening country would have destroyed them, cut off as they would have been from their supplies. Even as it was, when they had proceeded to the vicinity of Luceria, besiegers and besieged suffered alike from scarcity of food: everything was carried up from Arpi for the Romans, but so precarious were their supplies, that while the foot-soldiers were busy with outpost-duty, guard-mounting, and entrenching, the cavalry brought up corn for them from Arpi in leather pouches, and, now and then, encountering the enemy, were forced to throw off the corn from their horses and fight; the besieged, until the arrival of the other consul with his victorious army, had got in their provisions—and auxiliary forces too—from the mountains of the Samnites. The coming of Publilius tightened up the lines; for, turning the siege over to his colleague, he was free to range the country-side, where he made things difficult for the supply-trains of the enemy. The Samnites, therefore, who were encamped about Luceria, in despair of being able to endure the scarcity, if the siege continued, were obliged to gather up their forces from every quarter and give battle to Papirius.

XIV. At this juncture, while both sides were proelium legati Tarentini interveniunt denuntiantes Samnitibus Romanisque ut bellum omitterent: per utros stetisset quo minus discederetur ab armis, 2 aduersus eos se pro alteris pugnaturos. Ea legatione Papirius audit a perinde ac motus dictis eorum cum collega se communicaturum respondit; accitoque eo, cum tempus omne in apparatu pugnae

 consumpsisset, conlocutus de re haud dubia signum
 3 pugnae proposuit. Agentibus divina humanaque quae adsolent cum acie dimicandum est consulibus
 Tarentini legati occursare responsum exspectantes;
 4 quibus Papirius ait: "Auspicia secunda esse, Tarentini, pullarius nuntiat; litatum praeterea est egregie;
 auctoribus dis, ut videtis, ad rem gerendam pro-5 ficiuscimur." Signa inde ferre¹ iussit et copias eduxit, vanissimam inerepans gentem quae, suarum impotens rerum prae domesticis seditionibus dis-cordiisque, aliis modum pacis ac belli facere aequum censeret.

6 Samnites ex parte altera, cum omnem curam belli remisissent, quia aut pacem vere cupiebant aut expediebat simulare, ut Tarentinos sibi conciliarent, cum instructos repente ad pugnam Romanos con-7 spexissent, vociferari se in auctoritate Tarentinorum manere nec descendere in aciem nec extra vallum
 arma ferre; deceptos potius quodcumque casus ferat

¹ ferre Ω : ferri ; Gronovius.

¹ i.e. a red flag hung out in front of the general's tent.

² Two kinds of divination are alluded to: (1) by observing the feeding of the sacred chickens, (2) by inspecting the entrails of a victim.

making ready for the struggle, came ambassadors B.C. 320 from Tarentum, admonishing both Samnites and Romans to desist from war. Whichever party should oppose the cessation of hostilities, against that they proposed to fight in behalf of the other. After listening to these envoys, Papirius, as though moved by what they said, replied that he would consult his colleague. Having sent for Publilius, he employed every moment of the interval in making his preparations, and when he had conferred with him about a matter which admitted of no doubt, displayed the battle-signal.¹ The consuls were busy with matters pertaining to gods and to men, as they are wont to be on the eve of an engagement, when the envoys from Tarentum approached them to receive their answer; to whom Papirius replied, "Tarentines, the keeper of the chickens reports that the signs are favourable; the sacrifice too has been exceedingly auspicious;² as you see, the gods are with us at our going into action." He then commanded to advance the standards, and marshalled his troops, with exclamations on the folly of a nation which, powerless to manage its own affairs, because of domestic strife and discord, presumed to lay down the limits of peace and war for others.

The Samnites, on their side, having dismissed from their minds every anxiety regarding the war, either because they sincerely wished for peace, or because it was expedient for them to pretend that they wished it, in order to gain the support of the Tarentines, when they beheld the Romans suddenly arrayed for battle, cried out that they would abide by the will of the Tarentines and would neither take the field nor advance beyond the rampart; they had

passuros quam ut sprevisse pacis auctores Tarentinos
 8 videantur. Accipere se omen consules aiunt et eam precari mentem hostibus ut ne vallum quidem 9 defendant. Ipsi inter se partitis copiis succedunt hostium munimentis et simul undique adorti, cum pars fossas explerent, pars vellerent vallum atque
 in fossas proruerent nec virtus modo insita sed ira etiam exulceratos ignominia stimularet animos, castra
 10 invasere; et pro se quisque, non haec Furculas nec Caudium nec saltus invios esse, ubi errorem fraus
 superbe vicisset, sed Romanam virtutem, quam nec 11 vallum nec fossae arcerent memorantes, caedunt
 pariter resistentes fusosque, inermes atque armatos,
 servos liberos, puberes impubes, homines iumentaque;
 12 nec ullum superfuisset animal, ni consules receptui
 signum dedissent avidosque caedis milites e castris 13 hostium imperio ac minis¹ expulissent. Itaque apud infenos ob interpellatam dulcedinem irae confestim oratio habita est, ut doceretur miles minime
 cuiquam militum consules odio in hostes cessisse 14 aut cessuros; quin duces sicut belli ita insatiabilis supplicii futuros fuisse, ni respectus equitum sescentorum qui Luceriae obsides tenerentur praepeditisset² 15 animos, ne desperata venia hostes caecos in sup-

¹ ac minis L³, - : agminis Ω.

² praepeditisset (pre-) -, - : praepedissent Ω.

¹ The omen lay in the Samnites' expressed purpose to offer no resistance.

been deceived, but they chose rather to endure whatever Fortune might have in store for them than be thought to have spurned the peaceful advice of the Tarentines. The consuls declared that they embraced the omen,¹ praying that the enemy might be so minded as not even to defend his rampart. They themselves, dividing their troops between them, marched up to the earthworks of the Samnites, and attacked them at once from every side. Some began to fill the trenches, others to pull up the palings and fling them into the trenches; besides their native courage they were goaded on by anger at the disgrace that rankled in their hearts. Forcing their way into the camp, while every man repeated that here were no Forks, no Caudium, no trackless passes, where guile had arrogantly triumphed over error, but Roman manhood, which neither rampart nor trenches could keep out, they cut down without distinction those who resisted and those who fled, the armed and the unarmed, slaves and freemen, adults and children, men and beasts; nor would anything living have survived, had not the consuls bade sound the recall and expelled the bloodthirsty soldiers from the enemy's camp with commands and threats. The men were incensed at the interruption of their sweet revenge, and accordingly the consuls at once addressed them and explained that they had neither yielded nor meant to yield to any of the soldiers in hatred of the enemy: on the contrary, they would have led the way, as in war, so in the exaction of endless vengeance, had their indignation not been checked by thoughts of the six hundred knights who were being held as hostages in Luceria; but they feared that the enemy, if they despaired of

A.U.C.
434 plicia eorum ageret, perdere prius quam perire
16 optantes. Laudare ea milites laetarique obviam itum irae suae esse ac fateri omnia patienda potius quam proderetur salus tot principum Romanae iuuentutis.

A.U.C.
435 XV. Dimissa contione consilium habitum omnibusne copiis Luceriam premerent an altero exercitu
et duce Apuli circa, gens dubiae ad id voluntatis, 2 temptarentur. Publilius consul ad peragrandam profectus Apuliam aliquot expeditione una populos aut vi subegit aut condicionibus in societatem accepit.
3 Papirio quoque, qui obsessor Luceriae restiterat, brevi ad spem eventus respondit. Nam insessis omnibus viis per quas commeatus ex Samnio subvehebantur, fame domiti Samnites qui Luceriae in praesidio erant legatos misere ad consulem Romanum,
ut receptis equitibus qui causa belli essent absisteret
4 obsidione. Iis Papirius ita respondit: debuisse eos Pontium Herenni filium, quo auctore Romanos sub-iugum misissent, consulere quid victis patiendum
5 censeret: ceterum quoniam ab hostibus in se aequa statui quam in se ipsi ferre maluerint, nuntiare Luceriam iussit, arma sarcinas iumenta multitudinem omnem imbellem intra moenia relinquenter;

quarter, might be driven blindly to put their prisoners to death, choosing to slay before they were slain themselves. These arguments the men applauded, and rejoiced that their wrath had been restrained; they confessed that it was better that they should suffer anything than betray the lives of so many distinguished young Romans.

XV. The assembly was dismissed, and a council of war was held to determine whether they should press the siege ^{B.C. 320} with all their forces, or should employ one army and its general to test the dispositions of the Apulians around them—a people whose sympathies were still in doubt. The consul Publilius set out on a march through Apulia and in a single expedition either subjugated, or by granting terms, received into alliance, a goodly number of states. Papirius, too, who had remained behind at Lucezia to conduct the siege, soon found the outcome answerable to his hopes; for all the roads by which supplies were wont to be brought in from Samnium were blocked, and the Samnite garrison were reduced by hunger to send a deputation to the Roman consul with an offer to release the horsemen who were the cause of the war, on condition that he would raise the siege. Papirius replied that they ought to have gone to Pontius, the son of Herennius, at whose instance they had sent the Romans under the yoke, to find out what the vanquished deserved to suffer; however, since they preferred that their enemies should decide on a just penalty for them, rather than propose one for themselves, he bade them take word to Lucezia that they should leave their arms, packs, sumpter animals, and all the non-combatants, within the walls; the soldiers he in-

LIVY

A.U.C. 6 militem se cum singulis vestimentis sub iugum
 435 missurum, ulciscentem inlatam, non novam infe-7 rentem ignominiam. Nihil recusatum. Septem milia militum sub iugum missa, praedaque ingens Luceriae capta receptis omnibus signis armisque
 quae ad Caudium amissa erant, et quod omnia superabat gaudia, equitibus recuperatis¹ quos pignora
 pacis custodiendos Luceriam Samnites dederant.
 8 Haud ferme alia mutatione subita rerum clarior victoria populi Romani est, si quidem etiam, quod
 quibusdam in annalibus invenio, Pontius Herenni filius, Samnitium imperator, ut expiaret consulum
 ignominiam, sub iugum cum ceteris est missus.
 9 Ceterum id minus miror obscurum esse de hostium
 duce dedito missoque; id magis mirabile est ambigi, Luciusne Cornelius dictator cum L. Papirio Cursore
 10 magistro equitum eas res ad Caudium atque inde Luceriam gesserit ultiorque unicus Romanae igno-miniae haud sciam an iustissimo triumpho ad eam aetatem secundum Furium Camillum triumphaverit, an consulum—Papirique praecipuum—id decus sit.
 11 Sequitur hunc errorem aliis error, Cursorne Papirius proximis comitiis cum Q. Aulio Cerretano iterum obrem bene gestam Luceriae continuato magistratu

¹ recuperatis Walters and Conway (passim): recuperatis Ω.

tended to send under the yoke, clad only in their tunics, inflicting on them no new disgrace, but requiting that which had first been put upon the Romans. They made no objection, and seven thousand men were sent under the yoke. Huge spoils were captured in Luceria, and all the standards and arms which had been lost at Caudium were retaken, and, to cap the climax of their joy, the horsemen were recovered whom the Samnites had assigned, as pledges of peace, to be guarded at Luceria. There is scarce any other Roman victory more glorious for its sudden reversal of fortune, especially if it is true, as I find in certain annals, that Pontius the son of Herennius, the Samnite general-in-chief, was sent with the rest under the yoke, to expiate the humiliation of the consuls.

Be that as it may, I am not greatly surprised that there should be some doubt as to the general of the enemy who was surrendered and disgraced; the amazing thing is the uncertainty whether it was Lucius Cornelius, as dictator—with Lucius Papirius Cursor, as master of the horse—who won these victories at Caudium and subsequently at Luceria, and, because of the signal vengeance that he exacted for Rome's shame, enjoyed a triumph which I should be inclined to rate as the best-deserved of all down to that time, next after that of Furius Camillus; or whether that honour belongs to the consuls—and particularly to Papirius. This doubt is attended with another—whether at the ensuing election Papirius Cursor was retained in office in recognition of his victory at Luceria, being returned for a third time to the consulship, together with Quintus Aulius Cerretanus—then chosen for the second time—or consul tertium creatus sit an L. Papirius Mugillanus¹

et in cognomine erratum sit.

XVI. Convenit iam inde per consules reliqua belli perfecta. Aulius cum Ferentanis² uno secundo proelio debellavit urbemque ipsam, quo se fusa contulerat acies, obsidibus imperatis in ditionem accepit. Pari fortuna consul alter cum Satricanis, qui cives Romani post Caudinam cladem ad Samnites defecerant praesidiumque eorum in urbem accep- perant, rem gessit. Nam cum ad moenia Satrici³ admotus esset exercitus legatisque missis ad pacem cum precibus petendam triste responsum ab consule redditum esset, nisi praesidio Samnitium interfecto aut tradito ne ad se remearent, plus ea voce quam armis inlatis terroris colonis iniectum. Itaque sub- inde exsequuntur quaerendo a consule legati quoniam se pacto paucos et infirmos crederet praesidio tam valido et armato vim allatuos. Ab iisdem consilium petere iussi, quibus auctoribus praesidium in urbem accepissent, discedunt aegreque impetrato ut de ea re consuli senatum responsaque ad se referri sineret ad suos redeunt. Duae factiones senatum distine- bant, una cuius principes erant defectionis a populo Romano auctores, altera fidelium civium; certatum ab utrisque tamen est ut ad reconciliandam pacem consuli opera navaretur. Pars altera, cum praesidium

¹ Mugillanus *PFL*⁰: mugilanus MTDLA.

² Ferentanis M²P²FUOT²: frentanis MTDLA: frentranis P: Forentanis Gronovius.

³ Satrici s: Satricae (or -ce) A.

¹ Their town has been conjecturally identified with Horace's "low-lying Forentum," Odes, III. iv. 16.

whether it was Lucius Papirius Mugillanus, and the mistake was a matter of the surname.

XVI. It is agreed that from this point onwards the war was brought to a conclusion by the consuls. Aulus finished in one successful battle the campaign against the Ferentani,¹ and having exacted hostages, received the surrender of the city itself, in which their defeated army had taken refuge. With no less good fortune the other consul overcame the Satricans, who—though Roman citizens—had revolted, after the Caudine misfortune, to the Samnites, of whom they had admitted a garrison into their city. For when the Roman army had drawn near the walls of Satricum, the townspeople sent ambassadors to sue humbly for peace; but the consul returned them a harsh answer: that unless they put to death the Samnite garrison or delivered it up, they must come back to him no more—a saying which struck more terror into their hearts than the threatened assault. And so the envoys persisted in demanding of the consul how he supposed that they, being few and weak, could force so strong and well-armed a garrison. But he bade them seek advice from those same men at whose instigation they had received the garrison into their city; and after they had with no small difficulty persuaded him to suffer them to consult their senate in the matter and report to him its decision, they went back to their people. Two factions kept the senate divided: one of these had for leaders the men who had inspired the revolt from Rome, the other was composed of loyal citizens; both, however, were equally anxious to accommodate the consul, so that they might be granted peace. One party, seeing that the Samnite garrison was intend-

Samnitium, quia nihil satis praeparati erat ad obsidionem tolerandam, excessurum proxima nocte esset,¹ enuntiare consuli satis habuit, qua noctis hora quaque porta et quam in viam egressurus hostis 8 foret; altera, quibus invitatis descitum ad Samnites erat, eadem nocte portam etiam consuli² aperuerunt 9 armatosque clam hoste³ in urbem acceperunt. Ita duplii proditione et praesidium Samnitium insessis circa viam silvestribus locis necopinato oppressum est, et ab urbe plena hostium clamor sublatus; momentoque unius horae caesus Samnis, Satricanus 10 captus, et omnia in potestate consulis erant. Qui quaestione habita quorum opera defectio esset facta, quos sontes comperit virgis caesos securi percussit praesidioque valido imposito arma Satricanis ademit.

11 Inde ad triumphum decessisse Romam Papirium Cursorem scribunt, qui eo duce Luceriam receptam 12 Samnitesque sub iugum missos auctores sunt. Et fuit vir haud dubie dignus omni bellica laude, non animi solum vigore sed etiam corporis viribus 13 excellens. Praecipua pedum pernitas inerat, quae cognomen etiam dedit; victoremque⁴ cursu omnium aetatis suae fuisse ferunt,⁵ seu crurum⁶ vi seu exer-

¹ esset L³A³: esse MTDLA: omitted by PFUO.

² consuli ζ : consulibus Ω .

³ clam hoste Gelenius: clam nocte Ω : clam Weissenborn.

⁴ victoremque M³F¹ (or F³) A^x (over erasure) Frag. Hav.²: uictorisque Ω .

⁵ ferunt Madvig: ferunt et Ω .

⁶ crurum Madvig: uirium Ω .

B.C. 319

ing to escape on the following night—for they had made no preparations for enduring a siege—deemed it sufficient to let the consul know at what hour and by what gate the enemy meant to leave, and what road he planned to take. The others, who had opposed going over to the Samnites, that same night also opened a gate to the consul, and without letting the Samnites know, admitted his soldiers into the city. In consequence of this double betrayal, the Samnite garrison was surprised and overpowered by an ambush laid in the woods about their road, while a shout went up in the city, which was filled with enemies. Thus, in one crowded hour, the Samnites were slain and the Satricans captured, and all things brought under the power of the consul; who conducted an investigation, and, having ascertained who were responsible for the defection, had the guilty parties scourged and beheaded; after which he imposed a strong garrison upon the Satricans and deprived them of their arms.

Papirius Cursor then departed for Rome to celebrate his triumph, as those writers state who name him as the commander who recovered Luceria and sent the Samnites under the yoke. No question, he was a man deserving of all praise as a soldier, excelling, as he did, not only in the vigour of his spirit, but in physical strength. He possessed remarkable fleetness of foot, which was even the source of his surname.¹ It is said that he vanquished all his mates at running, whether owing to the ¹ Cursor means “runner,” but the name seems really to have been an inheritance in the present case, for at chap. xxxiv. § 20 we read of it as belonging to the grandfather of our Papirius.

A.U.C.
435

citatione multa ; cibi vinique eundem capacissimum ; 14 nec cum ullo asperiorem, quia ipse invicti ad laborem corporis esset, fuisse militiam pediti pariter equi-15 tique ; equites etiam aliquando ausos ab eo petere
 ut sibi pro re bene gesta laxaret aliquid laboris ;
 16 quibus ille "Ne nihil remissum dicatis, remitto," inquit, "ne utique dorsum demulceatis, cum ex equis descendetis." Et vis erat in eo viro imperii 17 ingens pariter in socios civesque. Praenestinus praetor per timorem segnus ex subsidiis suos duxerat
 in primam aciem ; quem cum inambulans ante taber-18 naculum vocari iussisset, lictorem expedire securem iussit, ad quam vocem exanimi stante Praenestino :
 "Agedum, lictor, excide radicem hanc" inquit "in-commodam ambulantibus," perfusumque ultimi sup-19 pliei metu multa dicta dimisit. Haud dubie illa aetate, qua nulla virtutum feracior fuit, nemo unus erat vir quo magis innixa res Romana staret. Quin eum parem destinant animis magno Alexandro ducem, si arma Asia perdomita in Europam vertisset.

XVII. Nihil minus quaesitum a principio huius operis videri potest quam ut plus iusto ab rerum ordine declinarem varietatibusque distinguendo opere
 et legentibus velut deverticula amoena et requiem

strength of his legs or to much exercise; that he ^{B.C. 319} had also the greatest capacity for food and wine; and that no general was harder on his men, whether horse or foot, for his own constitution could never be overcome by toil. It is related how his cavalry-men ventured once to ask him if in view of their good conduct he would not excuse them from some portion of their duties; to whom he answered, "That you may not say that I have excused you nothing, I freely excuse you from the duty of rubbing your backs when you dismount." And the man possessed a power of command which was equally effective with citizens and allies. A Praenesteine praetor had, through timidity, been somewhat slow in bringing his men up from the supports to the fighting line. Papirius strolled over to the praetor's tent and having bidden them call him out, commanded a lictor to prepare his axe. Hearing this the praetor stood aghast, but Papirius said to the lictor, "Come, cut out this root; it is a nuisance to those who walk." He then fined the man and let him go, half-dead with the fear of capital punishment. There can be no doubt that in his generation, than which none was ever more fruitful of great qualities, there was no single man who did more to uphold the Roman State. Indeed people regard him as one who might have been a match in generalship for Alexander the Great, if the latter, after subjugating Asia, had turned his arms against Europe.

XVII. Nothing can be thought to have been more remote from my intention, since I first set about this task, than to depart unduly from the order of events, and to aim, by the introduction of ornamental digressions, at providing as it were agreeable by-

- 2 animo meo quaererem ; tamen tanti regis ac ducis mentio, quibus saepe tacitus¹ cogitationibus volutavi²
 animum, eas evocat in medium, ut quaerere libeat quinam eventus Romanis rebus, si cum Alexandro foret bellatum, futurus fuerit.
- 3 Plurimum in bello pollere videntur militum copia
 et virtus, ingenia imperatorum, fortuna per omnia 4 humana, maxime in res bellicas potens : ea et singula intuenti et universa, sicut ab aliis regibus genti-busque ita ab hoc quoque, facile praestant invictum
- 5 Romanum imperium. Iam primum, ut ordiar ab
 ducibus comparandis, haud equidem abnuo egregium ducem fuisse Alexandrum ; sed clariorem tamen eum facit quod unus fuit, quod adulescens in incremento rerum, nondum alteram fortunam expertus, decessit.
- 6 Ut alios reges claros ducesque omittam, magna exempla casuum humanorum, Cyrum, quem maxime
 Graeci laudibus celebrant, quid nisi longa vita, sicut Magnum modo Pompeium, vertenti praebuit fortunae ?
- 7 Recenseam duces Romanos, nec omnes omnium
 aetatum, sed ipsos eos cum quibus consulibus aut
 8 dictatoribus Alexandro fuit bellandum, M. Valerium Corvum C. Marcius Rutulum³ C. Sulpicius T.
 Manlium Torquatum Q. Publilium Philonem L.
 Papirium Cursorem Q. Fabium Maximum duos Decios

¹ tacitus PF: tacitis Ω.

² volutavi ζ: uolutauit Ω.

³ Rutulum Conway (cf. his note on III. vii. 6): Rutilium Ω.

¹ Professor Anderson argues that the following digression (chap. xvii. § 3 through chap. xix) was a youthful exercise in rhetoric written when Livy was a boy and later inserted here without revision, but with the addition of an introductory section (§§ 1, 2). See his edition, App. III, and paths for the reader, and mental relaxation for myself. Nevertheless the mention of so great a prince and captain evokes certain thoughts which I have often silently pondered in my mind, and disposes me to enquire how the Roman State would have fared in a war with Alexander.¹

It appears that in war the factors of chief importance are the numbers and valour of the soldiers, the abilities of the commanders, and Fortune, which, powerful in all the affairs of men, is especially so in war. These factors, whether viewed separately or conjointly, afford a ready assurance, that, even as against other princes and nations, so also against this one the might of Rome would have proved invincible. First of all—to begin by comparing commanders—I do not deny that Alexander was a remarkable general; still, his fame was enhanced by the fact that he was a sole commander, and the further fact that he died young, in the flood-tide of success, when as yet he had experienced no other lot. Not to speak of other distinguished kings and generals, illustrious proofs of human vicissitude, what else was it but length of days that exposed Cyrus, whom the Greeks exalt so high in their panegyries, to the fickleness of Fortune? And the same thing was lately seen in the case of Pompey the Great. Need I repeat the names of the Roman generals, not all nor of every age, but those very ones with whom, as consuls or as dictators, Alexander would have had to fight—Marcus Valerius Corvus, Gaius Marcius Rutulus, Gaius Sulpicius, Titus Manlius Torquatus, Quintus Publilius Philo, Lucius Papirius Cursor, Quintus Fabius Maximus,

LIVY

A.U.C. 9 L. Volumnium M'. Curium? ¹ Deinceps ingentes
 435 sequuntur viri, si Punicum Romano praevertisset 10 bellum seniorque in Italiam traieisset. Horum in quolibet cum indoles eadem quae in Alexandro erat
 animi ingeniique; tum disciplina militaris, iam inde
 ab initiis urbis tradita per manus, in artis ² perpetuis 11 praeceptis ordinatae modum venerat. Ita reges gesserant bella, ita deinde exactores regum Iunii Valeriique, ita deinceps Fabii Quinctii Cornelii, ita Furius Camillus, quem iuvenes ii quibus cum Alex-12 andro dimicandum erat senem viderant. Militaria opera pugnando obeunti Alexandro—nam ea quoque
 haud minus clarum eum faciunt—cessisset videlicet
 in acie oblatus par Manlius Torquatus aut Valerius 13 Corvus, insignes ante milites quam duces, cessissent
 Decii, devotis corporibus in hostem ruentes, cessisset
 Papirius Cursor illo corporis robore, illo animi!
 14 Victus esset consiliis iuvenis unius, ne singulos
 nominem, senatus ille, quem qui ex regibus constare
 dixit unus veram speciem Romani senatus cepit!
 15 Id vero erat periculum, ne sollertius quam quilibet
 unus ex his quos nominavi castris locum caperet, commeatus expediret, ab insidiis praecaveret, tempus

¹ M'. Curium? Sigonius (C.I.L. i², p. 46): marcum (or m)
Ω (C.I.L. i², pp. 135, 171): marcium Ω.

² artis A⁶ ζ: artes Ω.

¹ Cineas, the ambassador of King Pyrrhus. Cf. Plut. Pyrrhus, xix.

the two Decii, Lucius Volumnius, Manius Curius? B.C. 319
 After these come some extraordinary men, if he had turned his attention to war with Carthage first and later with Rome, and had crossed into Italy when somewhat old. Any one of these was as highly endowed with courage and talents as was Alexander; and military training, handed down from the very beginning of the City, had taken on the character of a profession, built up on comprehensive principles. So the kings had warred; so after them the expellers of the kings, the Junii and the Valerii, and so in succession the Fabii, Quinetii, Cornelii, and Furius Camillus, whom in his old age those had seen, as youths, who would have had to fight with Alexander. But in the performance of a soldier's work in battle—for which Alexander was no less distinguished—Manlius Torquatus or Valerius Corvus would, forsooth, have yielded to him, had they met him in a hand-to-hand encounter, famous though they were as soldiers before ever they won renown as captains! The Decii, of course, would have yielded to him, who hurled their devoted bodies upon the foe! Papirius Cursor would have yielded, with that wondrous strength of body and of spirit! The counsels of a single youth would no doubt have got the better of that senate—not to speak of individual members—which was called an assembly of kings by him who before all others had a true conception of the Roman Senate!¹ And I suppose there was the danger that Alexander would display more skill than any of these whom I have named, in selecting a place for a camp, in organizing his service of supply, in guarding against ambuscades, in choosing a time for battle, in

A.U.C. pugnae deligeret, aciem instrueret, subsidiis firmaret !
 435 16 Non cum Dareo¹ rem esse dixisset, quem mulierum
 ac spadonum agmen trahentem, inter purpuram atque
 aurum oneratum fortunae apparatibus sua, praedam
 verius quam hostem, nihil aliud quam bene ausus
 17 vana contemnere incruentus devicit. Longe alius Italiae quam Indiae, per quam temulento agmine
 comisabundus incessit, visus illi habitus esset, saltus Apuliae ac montes Lucanos cernenti et vestigia
 recentia domesticae clidis ubi avunculus eius nuper, Epiri rex Alexander, absumptus erat.

XVIII. Et loquimur de Alexandro nondum merso secundis rebus, quarum nemo intolerantior fuit.
 2 Qui si ex habitu novae fortunae novique, ut ita
 3 dicam, ingenii quod sibi victor induerat spectetur, Dareo magis similis quam Alexander in Italiani
 venisset et exercitum Macedoniae oblitum degene-4 rantemque iam in Persarum mores adduxisset.
 Referre in tanto rege piget superbam mutationem
 vestis et desideratas humi iacentium adulationes, etiam victis Macedonibus graves, nedum victoribus,
 et foeda supplicia et inter vinum et epulas caedes
 5 amicorum et vanitatem ementiendae stirpis. Quid

¹ Dareo MPTDL (and chap. xviii. § 3 MPOT) : dario (darici O) P²FU_A (and below P²FUDLA).

¹ Darius III, defeated by Alexander in the battle of Arbela, 331 B.C.

² VIII. xxiv.

³ Philotas was examined under torture and confessed participation in a plot against Alexander's life. He implied also his father Parmenio, the general, and both were executed. Clitus, who had saved Alexander's life at the Granicus, was killed by him at a banquet in a fit of marshalling his troops, in providing strong reserves!^{B.C. 319} He would have said it was no Darius¹ whom he had to deal with, trailing women and eunuchs after him, and weighed down with the gold and purple trappings of his station. Him he found a booty rather than an enemy, and conquered without bloodshed, merely by daring to despise vain shows. Far different from India, through which he progressed at the head of a rout of drunken revellers, would Italy have appeared to him, as he gazed on the passes of Apulia and the Lucanian mountains, and the still fresh traces of that family disaster wherein his uncle, King Alexander of Epirus, had lost his life.²

XVIII. And we are speaking of an Alexander not yet overwhelmed with prosperity, which none has ever been less able to bear. For viewing him in the light of his new fortune and of the new character—if I may use the expression—which he had assumed as conqueror, he would evidently have come to Italy more like Darius than like Alexander, at the head of an army that had forgotten Macedonia and was already adopting the degenerate customs of the Persians. I am loath, in writing of so great a prince, to remind the reader of the ostentatious alteration in his dress, and of his desire that men should prostrate themselves in adulation, a thing which even conquered Macedonians would have found oppressive, much more than those who had been victorious; of his cruel punishments and the murder of his friends as they drank and feasted; of the boastful lie about his origin.³ What if his love of wine had drunken rage. The last clause alludes to Alexander's claim that Zeus, not Philip, was his father.

si vini amor in dies fieret acerior? Quid si trux ac praeferenda ira?—Nec quicquam dubium inter scrip-tores refero,— nullane haec damna imperatoriis
6 virtutibus ducimus? Id vero periculum erat, quod levissimi ex Graecis, qui Parthorum quoque contra nomen Romanum gloriae favent, dictitare solent, ne maiestatem nominis Alexandri, quem ne fama 7 quidem illis notum arbitror fuisse, sustinere non potuerit populus Romanus; et adversus quem Athenis, in civitate fracta Macedonum armis, cernentes¹ tum maxime prope fumantes Thebarum
ruinas, contionari libere ausi sunt homines—id quod ex monumentis orationum patet—adversus eum nemo ex tot proceribus Romanis vocem liberam missurus fuerit!

8 Quantalibet magnitudo hominis concipiatur animo;
unius tamen ea magnitudo hominis erit collecta 9 paulo plus decem annorum felicitate; quam qui eo extollunt quod populus Romanus etsi nullo bello multis tamen proeliis victus sit, Alejandro nullius pugnae non secunda fortuna fuerit, non intellegunt
se hominis res gestas, et eius iuvenis, cum populi
iam quadringentesimum² bellantis annum rebus 10 conferre. Miremur si, cum ex hac parte saecula plura numerentur quam ex illa anni, plus in tam

¹ cernentes UDx (Madrig): cernente Ω.

² quadringentesimum (i.e. CCCC) Tan. Faber: octingente-simum (i.e. DCCC) Ω.

¹ This is supposed to refer to Timagenes, an historian of a notoriously anti-Roman bias.

every day grown stronger? and his truculent and fiery anger? I mention only things which historians regard as certain. Can we deem such vices to be no detraction from a general's good qualities? But there was forsooth the danger—as the silliest of the Greeks,¹ who exalt the reputation even of the Parthians against the Romans, are fond of alleging—that the Roman People would have been unable to withstand the majesty of Alexander's name, though I think that they had not so much as heard of him; and that out of all the Roman nobles not one would have dared to lift up his voice against him, although in Athens, a city crushed by the arms of Macedonia, at the very moment when men had before their eyes the reeking ruins of the neighbouring Thebes, they dared inveigh against him freely, as witness the records of their speeches.²

However imposing the greatness of the man may appear to us, still this greatness will be that of one man only, and the fruits of little more than ten years of success. Those who magnify it for this reason, that the Roman People, albeit never in any war, have yet suffered defeat in a number of battles, whereas Alexander's fortune was never aught but prosperous in any battle, fail to perceive that they are comparing the achievements of a man—and a young man too—with those of a people that was now in its four hundredth year of warfare. Should it occasion us surprise if, seeing that upon the one side are counted more generations than are years

¹ An allusion, more rhetorical than exact, to the famous Philippics of Demosthenes, the latest of which was probably delivered some six years before the destruction of Thebes in 335 B.C.

A.U.C.
435 longo spatio quam in aetate tredecim annorum
 11 fortuna variaverit? Quin tu hominis cum homine 12 et ducis cum duce fortunam confers?¹ Quot Romanos duces nominem quibus nunquam adversa fortuna pugnae fuit! Paginas in annalibus magis-tratumque fastis² percurrere licet consulum dicta-torumque quorum nec virtutis nec fortunae ullo 13 die populum Romanum paenituit. Et quo sint mirabiliores quam Alexander aut quisquam rex, denos vicenosque dies quidam dictatoram, nemo 14 plus quam annum consulatum gessit; ab tribunis plebis dilectus impediti sunt; post tempus ad bella
 ierunt, ante tempus comitiorum causa revocati sunt; 15 in ipso conatu rerum circumegit se annus; collegae
 nunc temeritas nunc pravitas impedimento aut damno
 fuit; male gestis rebus alterius successum est; tironem
 aut mala disciplina institutum exercitum acceperunt.
 16 At hercule reges non liberi solum impedimentis
 omnibus sed domini rerum temporumque trahunt
 17 consiliis cuncta, non sequuntur. Invictus ergo Alexander cum invictis ducibus bella gessisset et eadem fortunae pignora in discrimen detulisset;
 18 immo etiam eo plus periculi subisset quod Macedones unum Alexandrum habuissent, multis casibus non

¹ hominis cum homine et ducis cum duce fortunam confers? Madvig: hominis cum homine et ducis (duces F) cum fortunam cum fortuna (cum fortuna fortunam T) confers Ω: homines cum homine, [et] duces cum duce, fortunam cum fortuna confers Walters and Conway.

² magistratumque fastis Walters and Conway: magistratum fastisque Ω.

¹ If we reckon the saculum or “generation” at thirty-three years, the Rome of Alexander’s time would have upon the other,¹ fortune should have varied more B.C. 319 in that long time than in a life of thirteen years? Why not compare a man's fortune with a man's, and a general's with a general's? How many Roman generals could I name who never suffered a reverse in battle! In our annals and lists of magistrates you may run through pages of consuls and dictators of whom it never on any day repented the Roman People, whether of their generalship or fortune. And what makes them more wonderful than Alexander or any king is this: some were dictators of ten or twenty days, and none held the consulship above a year; their levies were obstructed by the tribunes of the plebs; they were late in going to war, and were called back early to conduct elections; in the midst of their undertakings the year rolled round; now the rashness, now the frowardness of a colleague occasioned them losses or difficulties; they succeeded to affairs which others had mismanaged, they received an army of raw recruits, or one badly disciplined. Now consider kings: not only are they free from all impediments, but they are lords of time and circumstance, and in their counsels carry all things with them, instead of following in their train. So then, an undefeated Alexander would have warred against undefeated generals, and would have brought the same pledges of Fortune to the crisis. Nay, he would have run a greater risk than they, inasmuch as the Macedonians would have had but a single Alexander, not only exposed to many dangers, but endured a little over thirteen saccula. Livy says that people are really comparing these thirteen generations with the thirteen years of Alexander's (effective) life, i.e. his reign (336-323 B.C.).

A.U.C. 19 solum obnoxium sed etiam offerentem se, Romani 435 multi fuissent Alexandro vel gloria vel rerum magnitudine pares, quorum suo quisque fato sine publico discrimine viveret morereturque.

XIX. Restat ut copiae copiis comparentur vel numero vel militum genere vel multitudine auxiliorum. Censebantur eius aetatis lustris ducena 2 quinquagena milia capitum. Itaque in omni defectione sociorum Latini nominis urbano prope dilectu 3 decem scriebabantur legiones; quaterni quinique exercitus saepe per eos annos in Etruria, in Vmbria Gallis hostibus adiunctis, in Samnio, in Lucanis 4 gerebant bellum. Latium deinde omne cum Sabinis et Volseis et Aequis et omni Campania et parte Vmbriae Etruriaeque et Picentibus et Marsis Paelignisque ac Vestinis atque Apulis, adiuncta omni ora¹ Graecorum inferi maris a Thuriis² Neapolim et Cumas et inde Antio atque Ostiis tenus aut³ socios validos Romanis aut fractos bello invenisset hostes. 5 Ipse traieceret mare cum veteranis Macedonibus, non plus triginta milibus hominum et quattuor milibus equitum, maxime Thessalorum; hoc enim roboris erat. Persas Indos aliasque si adiunxisset gentes, impedimentum maius quam auxilium traheret.

¹ omni ora O¹A⁸ (or A¹, Aldus): omnis ora Ω.

² a Thuriis ꝝ: a Thuris (or athuris) Ω: authuris F: a brutiis Gronovius.

³ aut Dobree: Samnites aut Ω.

¹ In the last census which Livy had recorded (459 B.C.) were enrolled 117,321 persons III. xxiv. 10). Livy seems to have consulted the records of the censors, at least occasionally.

² Or possibly: at every revolt of the Latin allies.

incurring them voluntarily, while there would have been many Romans a match for Alexander, whether for glory or for the greatness of their deeds, of whom each several one would have lived and died as his own fate commanded, without endangering the State.

XIX. It remains to compare the forces on both sides, whether for numbers, or types of soldiers, or size of their contingents of auxiliaries. The quinquennial enumerations of that period put the population at 250,000.¹ And so at the time when all the Latin allies were in revolt² it was the custom to enroll ten legions, by a levy which was virtually limited to the City. In those years frequently four and five armies at a time would take the field, in Etruria, in Umbria (where they also fought the Gauls), in Samnium, and in Lucania. Later on Alexander would have found all Latium, with the Sabines, the Volsei and the Aequi, all Campania, and a portion of Umbria and Etruria, the Picentes and the Marsi and Paeligni, the Vestini and the Apulians, together with the whole coast of the Lower Sea, held by the Greeks, from Thurii as far as Naples and Cumae, and thence all the way to Antium and Ostia—all these, I say, he would have found either powerful friends of the Romans or their defeated enemies. He himself would have crossed the sea with veteran Macedonians to the number of not more than thirty thousand foot and four thousand horse—mostly Thessalians—for this was his main strength. If to these he had added Persians and Indians and other nations, he would have found them a greater burden to have dragged about than a help.

- 6 Adde, quod Romanis ad manum domi supplementum esset, Alexandro, quod postea Hannibali accidit, alieno in agro bellanti exercitus consenuisset. Arma clipei essent illis sarisaeque¹: Romano scutum, maius corpori tegumentum, et pilum, haud paulo quam hasta vehementius ictu missuque² telum.
- 7 Statarius uterque miles, ordines servans; sed illa phalanx immobilis et unius generis, Romana acies distinctior, ex pluribus partibus constans, facilis partienti, quacumque opus esset, facilis iungenti.
- 8 Iam in opere quis par Romano miles, quis ad tolerandum laborem melior? Uno proelio victus Alexander bello victus esset: Romanum, quem Caudium, quem Cannae non fregerunt, quae fregisset acies?
- 9 Ne ille saepe, etiam si prima prospere evenissent, Persas et Indos et imbellem Asiam quaesisset et
- 10 cum feminis sibi bellum fuisse dixisset, quod Epipi regem Alexandrum mortifero volnere ictum dixisse ferunt, sortem bellorum in Asia gestorum ab hoc ipso iuvene cum sua conferentem.
- 11 Evidem cum per annos quattuor et viginti primo Punico bello classibus certatum cum Poenis recordor,

¹ Arma clipei essent illis sarisaeque Mætria: arma cluisset arma cluisset sarisaeque illis id est hastae M: arma cluisset sarisaeque etc. M¹ or M²: arma clipeus (or clupeus) sarisaeque (or -eque) illis (or illis portare or illis. at or illis id est hastae) Ω.

² ictu missuque ꝝ: ictu missumque PTA²: ictum missuque Ω.

¹ The sarisa was a pike 21 feet long.

² The hasta was ordinarily used as a pike or lance, but was sometimes thrown, by means of a thong.

³ Aulus Gellius, xvii. xxi. 33, says that Alexander, as he

Add to this, that the Romans would have had recruits ready to call upon, but Alexander, as happened afterwards to Hannibal, would have found his army wear away, while he warred in a foreign land. His men would have been armed with targets and spears:¹ the Romans with an oblong shield, affording more protection to the body, and the Roman javelin, which strikes, on being thrown, with a much harder impact than the lance.² Both armies were formed of heavy troops, keeping to their ranks; but their phalanx was immobile and consisted of soldiers of a single type; the Roman line was opener and comprised more separate units; it was easy to divide, wherever necessary, and easy to unite. Moreover, what soldier can match the Roman in entrenching? Who is better at enduring toil? Alexander would, if beaten in a single battle, have been beaten in the war; but what battle could have overthrown the Romans, whom Caudium could not overthrow, nor Cannae? Nay, many a time—however prosperous the outset of his enterprise might have been—would he have wished for Indians and Persians and unwarlike Asiatics, and would have owned that he had before made war upon women, as Alexander, King of Epirus, is reported to have said, when mortally wounded, contrasting the type of war waged by this very youth in Asia, with that which had fallen to his own share.³

Indeed when I remember that we contended against the Carthaginians on the seas for four-and-was setting sail for Italy, remarked that he was going to the Romans, as it were to the men's quarters (andronitin); whereas the Macedonian had gone to the Persians, as to the quarters of the women (gynaeconitin).

A.U.C. vix aetatem Alexandri suffecturam fuisse reor ad 435 13 unum bellum; et forsitan, cum et foederibus vetustis iuncta res Punica Romanae esset et timor par adversus communem hostem duas potentissimas
 armis virisque urbes armaret, simul¹ Punico Roma-14 noque obrutus bello esset. Non quidem Alexandro duce nec integris Macedonum rebus sed experti
 tamen sunt Romani Macedonem hostem adversus Antiochum Philippum Persen non modo cum clade 15 ulla sed ne cum periculo quidem suo. Absit invidia verbo et civilia bella sileant: nunquam² a pedite, nunquam aperta acie, nunquam aequis, utique 16 nunquam nostris locis laboravimus; equitem sagittas, saltus impeditos, avia comineatibus loca gravis armis
 17 miles timere potest. Mille acies graviores quam Macedonum atque Alexandri avertit avertetque, modo sit perpetuus huius qua vivimus pacis amor
 et civilis cura concordiae.—

A.U.C. XX. M. Folius³ Flaccina inde et L. Plautius
 436-437 2 Venox consules facti. Eo anno ab frequentibus Samnitium populis de foedere renovando legati cum senatum humi strati movissent, reiecti ad populum 3 haudquaque tam efficaces habebant preces. Itaque de foedere negatum; induitiae biennii, cum per aliquot dies fatigassent singulos precibus, impetratae.

¹ simul ζ: et simul Ω.

² nunquam Dobree and Malvig: nunquam ab equite hoste nunquam Ω.

³ Folius ζ: follius (or ollius) Ω: Foslius Sigonius (C.I.L.
i², p. 130).

¹ The earliest treaty was said to have been made in 509 B.C. (Livy does not mention it, but Polybius does, at III. xxii.); and another in 348. See vii. xxvii. 2, and note.

twenty years, I think that the whole life of Alexander would hardly have sufficed for this single war; and perchance, inasmuch as the Punic State had been by ancient treaties leagued with the Roman,¹ and the two cities most powerful in men and arms might well have made common cause against the foe whom both dreaded, he had been crushed beneath the simultaneous attacks of Rome and Carthage. The Romans have been at war with the Macedonians—not, to be sure, when Alexander led them or their prosperity was unimpaired, but against Antiochus, Philippus, and Perses—and not only without ever suffering defeat, but even without incurring any danger. Proud word I would not speak, but never—and may civil wars be silent!—never have we been beaten by infantry, never in open battle, never on even, or at all events on favourable ground: cavalry and arrows, impassable defiles, regions that afford no road to convoys, may well occasion fear in heavy-armed troops. A thousand battle-arrays more formidable than those of Alexander and the Macedonians have the Romans beaten off—and shall do—if only our present love of domestic peace endure and our concern to maintain concord.

XX. Marcus Polius Flaccina and Lucius Plautius Venox were the next consuls. In that year came ambassadors from many Samnite states to seek a renewal of the treaty. Prostrating themselves before the senate, they aroused the pity of that order, but on being referred to the people found their prayers by no means so efficacious. Accordingly they were refused the treaty, but after some days spent in importuning individual citizens, they suc-

4 Et ex Apulia Teanenses Canusinique populationibus
fessi obsidibus L. Plautio consuli datis in ditionem 5 venerunt. Eodem anno primum praefecti Capuam creari coepti legibus ab L. Furio praetore datis, cum utrumque ipsi pro remedio aegris rebus discordia
6 intestina petissent; et duae Romae additae tribus, Ufentina ac Falerna.

7 Inclinatis semel in Apulia rebus Teates quoque Apuli ad novos consules, C. Iunium Bubuleum Q.
Aemilium Barbulam, foedus petitum venerunt, pacis per omnem Apuliam praestandae populo Romano 8 auctores. Id audacter spondendo impetravere, ut foedus daretur neque ut aequo tamen foedere sed ut 9 in dicione populi Romani essent. Apulia perdomita —nam Forento¹ quoque, valido oppido, Iunius potitus
erat—in Lucanos perrectum: inde repentino adventu 10 Aemili consulis Nerulum vi captum. Et postquam res Capuae stabilitas Romana disciplina fama per socios volgavit, Antiatibus quoque, qui se sine legibus certis, sine magistratibus agere querebantur, dati ab
senatu ad iura statuenda ipsius coloniae patroni; nee
arma modo sed iura etiam Romana late pollebant.

XXI. C. Iunius Bubuleus et Q. Aemilius Barbu-

¹ nam Forento Gronovius Iam Iorento M: nam florento PFO T² (marg.): nam florente U: nam Torento TDLA: iam torento (al. laurento) A².

¹ Making the number now thirty-one.

² Teate was in reality only another name for Teanum. Livy has been drawing upon two authorities, and their use of different names for the same people has led him to make two episodes out of one.

³ Prominent Romans were often invited to act in a semi-official relation of protectorship to Italian or even to foreign towns.

ceeded in obtaining a two years' truce. In Apulia, likewise, the Teanenses and Canusini exhausted by the devastation of their lands, gave hostages to Lucius Plautius the consul and made submission. In the same year praefects began to be elected and sent out to Capua, after Lucius Furius, the praetor, had given them laws—both steps being taken at the instance of the Capuans themselves, as a remedy for the distress occasioned by internal discord. At Rome two tribes were added, the Ufentina and the Falerna.¹

When affairs had once taken a turn in Apulia, the Apulian Teates² also came to the new consuls, Gaius Junius Bubuleus and Quintus Aemilius Barbula, to sue for a treaty, engaging to insure the Roman People peace throughout Apulia. By this bold pledge they prevailed so far as to obtain a treaty—not, however, on equal terms, but such as made them subject to the Romans. After Apulia had been thoroughly subdued—for Forentum, a strong town, had also fallen into the hands of Junius—the campaign was extended to the Lucanians, from whom, on the sudden arrival of Aemilius the consul, Nerulum was taken by assault. And once it had been noised abroad amongst the allies how the affairs of Capua were firmly established by Roman discipline, the Antiates, too, complained that they were living without fixed statutes and without magistrates, and the senate designated the colony's own patrons to draw up laws for it.³ Not Roman arms alone but also Roman law began to exert a widespread influence.

XXI. The consuls Gaius Junius Bubuleus and Quintus Aemilius Barbula gave over their legions, at

B.C. 318-317

A.U.C.
438

consules exitu anni non consulibus ab se creatis, Sp.
 Nautio et M. Popilio, ceterum dictatori L. Aemilio
 2 legiones tradiderant. Is cum L. Fulvio magistro equitum Saticulam¹ oppugnare adortus rebellandi
 3 causam Samnitibus dedit. Duplex inde terror inlatus Romanis: hinc Samnis magno exercitu coacto ad eximendos obsidione socios haud procul castris Romanorum castra posuit; hinc Saticulanus magno cum tumultu patefactis repente portis in stationes hostium 4 incurserunt. Inde pars utraque, spe alieni magis auxilii quam viribus freta suis, iusto mox proelio inito Romanos urgent, et quamquam anceps dimicatio
 erat, tamen utrimque tutam aciem dictator habuit,
 quia et locum haud facilem ad circumveniendum 5 cepit et diversa statuit signa. Infestior tamen in crumpentes incessit nec magno certamine intra moenia compulit, tum totam aciem in Samnites 6 obvertit. Ibi plus certaminis fuit; victoria sicut sera ita nec dubia nec varia fuit. Fusi in castra Samnites extinctis nocte ignibus tacito agmine
 abeunt et spe abiecta Saticulae tuendae Plisticam²
 ipsi, socios Romanorum, ut parem dolorem hosti-redderent, circumsidunt.

A.U.C.
439

XXII. Anno circumacto bellum deinceps ab dicta-

¹ Saticulam (and in § 3 Saticulanus and in § 6 Saticulae) Sigonius (Diod. xix. lxxii. 4): Satriculam (and Satriculanus and Satriculae below) Ω.

² Plisticam Sigonius (Diod. xix. lxxii. 3): plisiā M³D⁴A²: plisiā postiā F: post iam philisiā O: postiā Ω.

¹ Saticula was probably on the border between Campania and Samnium, and possibly occupied the same site as the modern S. Agata dei Goti.

the conclusion of the year, not to Spurius Nautius ^{B.C. 316} and Marcus Popilius, the consuls at whose election they had presided, but to a dictator—Lucius Aemilius. The latter, with Lucius Fulvius, his master of the horse, laid siege to Saticula,¹ and by so doing afforded the Samnites a pretext for renewing the war. The Romans were thus threatened in two quarters: on the one side the Samnites, with a large army which they had mustered to relieve their besieged allies, were encamped at no great distance from the Roman camp; on the other side the Saticulani suddenly threw their gates wide open and charged pell-mell against the outposts of the Romans. Both hostile armies—each relying rather on the other's help than on any strength of its own—then pressed home their attack, in what soon developed into a general engagement. But the dictator, despite the twofold struggle, was protected on both fronts, since he had chosen a position that was difficult to turn, and made his maniples face opposite ways. However, he attacked the sallying party with the greater fury, and, encountering no very sharp resistance, drove them back into the town. He then directed his entire line against the Samnites. There was more resistance here, but though the victory was slow in coming yet it was neither dubious nor partial. The Samnites fled in disorder to their camp, and in the night, putting out their fires, they silently stole away, and relinquishing all hope of saving Saticula, themselves laid siege to Plistica, an ally of Rome, that they might pay the enemy out in their own coin.

XXII. When the year had come round, the conduct of the war passed without a break into the ^{B.C. 315}

tore Q. Fabio gestum est; consules novi, sicut superiores, Romae manserunt; Fabius ad accipiendum ab Aemilio exercitum ad Saticulam cum supplemento 2 venit. Neque enim Samnites ad Plisticam¹ manserant sed accitis ab domo novis militibus multitudine freti castra eodem quo antea loco posuerunt lacessentesque proelio Romanos avertere ab obsidione co- 3 nabantur. Eo intentius dictator in moenia hostium versus id bellum tantum² ducere quod urbem oppugnabat, securior ab Samnitibus agere stationibus 4 modo oppositis ne qua in castra vis fieret. Eo ferocius adequitare Samnites vallo neque otium pati. Et cum iam prope in portis castrorum esset hostis, nihil consulto dictatore magister equitum Q. Aulus Cerretanus magno tumultu cum omnibus turmis 5 equitum evectus summovit hostem. Tum in³ minime pertinaci genere pugnae sic fortuna exercuit opes ut insignes⁴ utrimque clades et clara ipsorum 6 ducum ederet funera. Prior Samnitium imperator, aegre patiens quo⁵ tam ferociter adequitasset inde se fundi sugarique, orando hortandoque equites 7 proelium iteravit; in quem insignem inter suos crientem pugnam magister equitum Romanus infesta cuspide ita permisit equum ut uno iictu exanimem

¹ plisticam edid. (with Ω in § 11): plistiam Ω.

² tantum (=tantummodo) Gronovius: tantum nitebatur σ: tanti Ω.

³ tum in σ: cum in Ω: cunq. T.

⁴ insignes σ: insignis Ω.

⁵ quo σ: quod Ω.

¹ The men whose names are by so strange an oversight omitted here were L. Papirius Cursor and Q. Publilius Philo, each of whom had thrice held the office.

hands of the dictator Quintus Fabius. The new B.C. 315 consuls,¹ as their predecessors had done, remained in Rome; Fabius took new forces to replace the old, and proceeded to Saticula, to receive the army from Aemilius. For the Samnites had not continued before Plistica, but, summoning fresh troops from home and confiding in their numbers, had pitched their camp on the same spot as before, and were trying to provoke the Romans into giving battle, in the endeavour to divert them from the siege. This but intensified the dictator's concentration on the enemy's walls, for he deemed the war to consist solely in the attack upon the city, and treated the Samnites with much indifference, save only that he posted out-guards to prevent their making any inroad upon his camp. But this only made the Samnites the more audacious, and riding again and again up to the rampart, they gave no respite to the Romans. And now the enemy were almost in the gateway of the camp, when Quintus Aulius Cerretanus, the master of the horse, without consulting the dictator, sallied out with all his squadrons in a furious charge and drove them off. At this juncture—though in a type of battle by no means marked by obstinacy—Fortune so used her powers as to bring extraordinary losses on both sides, and on the commanders themselves distinguished deaths. The Samnite general first, indignant at being routed and put to flight from a position he had so boldly occupied, prevailed with his troopers by entreaties and encouragement to renew the conflict; against whom, conspicuous amongst his followers as he urged them into battle, the Roman master of the horse rode such a tilt with levelled lance as at one lunge unhorsed and killed

A.U.C.
439

equo praecipitaret. Nec, ut fit, ad ducis casum 8 perculsa magis quam irritata est multitudo; omnes qui circa erant in Aulium temere invectum per 9 hostium turmas tela coniecerunt; fratri praecipuum decus ulti Samnitium imperatoris di dederunt.¹ Is victorem detractum ex equo magistrum equitum plenus maeroris atque irae trucidavit, nec multum
 afuit quin corpore etiam, quia inter hostilis cecide-10 rat turmas, Samnites potirentur. Sed extemplo ad pedes desensum ab Romanis est coactique idem Samnites facere; et repentina acies circa corpora
 ducum pedestre proelium iniit, quo haud dubie
 superat Romanus, reciperatumque Auli corpus mixta 11 cum dolore laetitia victores in castra referunt. Sam-nites duce amissso et per equestre certamen temptatis viribus omissa Saticula, quam neququam defendi rebantur, ad Plisticae obsidionem redeunt, intraque
 paucos dies Saticula Romanus per ditionem, Plistica per vim Samnis potitur.

XXIII. Mutata inde belli sedes est; ad Soram
 2 ex Samnio Apuliaque traductae legiones. Sora ad Samnites defecerat interfectis colonis Romanorum.
 Quo cum prior Romanus exercitus ad ulciseendam civium necem reciperandamque coloniam magnis itineribus pervenisset² et sparsi³ per vias speculatores

¹ di (dii) dederunt Walch (who also suggested deditum): dederunt Ω: dedere A².

² pervenisset Σ: praeuenisset Ω.

³ et sparsi Σ: sparsi Ω: sparsiq. Σ.

him. Yet the rank and file were not more dismayed ^{B.C. 315} by their leader's death—though it often happens so—than they were angered ; and as Aulius rode recklessly on through the enemy's squadrons, all those about him darted their javelins at him. But the glory of avenging the Samnite general was given by Heaven in largest measure to his brother, who, wild with grief and rage, dragged down the victorious Roman from his seat and slew him. Indeed the Samnites almost got possession of the body, which had fallen in the midst of their troops. But the Romans at once dismounted, and the Samnites were forced to do the same ; and hurriedly forming up their lines, they began a battle on foot around the bodies of their generals, in which the Romans had easily the better. So they rescued the body of Aulius, which they bore back victoriously to their camp, with mingled feelings of sorrow and satisfaction. The Samnites, having lost their commander, and having tried what they could do in a cavalry engagement, gave up Saticula, which they felt was holding out in vain, and returned to the siege of Plistica. Within a few days' time Saticula had surrendered to the Romans and the Samnites had carried Plistica by assault.

XXIII. The seat of war was now shifted, and the legions were transferred from Samnium and Apulia to Sora, which had gone over to the Samnites, after putting to death the Roman colonists. The Roman army, by a series of forced marches, undertaken to avenge their slaughtered fellow-citizens and regain the colony, came first upon the ground. But the scouts who had scattered out along the roads reported one after the other that the Samnite legions

A.U.C.
459 3 sequi legiones Samnitum nec iam procul abesse alii
 4 super alios nuntiarent, obviam itum hosti atque ad Lautulas ancipi proelio dimicatum est. Non caedes non fuga alterius partis sed nox incertos
 5 victi videntur essent diremit. Invenio apud quos-dam adversam eam pugnam Romanis fuisse atque
 in ea cecidisse Q. Aulum magistrum equitum.
 6 Suffectus in locum Auli C. Fabius magister equitum cum exercitu novo ab Roma advenit et per pree-missos nuntios consulto dictatore ubi subsisteret
 quove tempore et qua ex parte hostem adgrederetur, substitutus ad omnia satis exploratis consiliis.
 7 Dictator cum per aliquot dies post pugnam continuissest suos intra vallum obsessi magis quam 8 obsidentis modo, signum repente pugnae proposuit et efficacius ratus ad accendendos virorum fortium animos nullam alibi quam in semet ipso cuiquam relictam spem de magistro equitum novoque ex-9 ercitu militem celavit, et tamquam nulla nisi in eruptione spes esset, "Locis" inquit "angustis, milites, deprehensi, nisi quam victoria patefecerimus
 0 viam nullam habemus. Stativa nostra munimento satis tuta sunt, sed inopia eadem infesta; nam et circa omnia defecerunt unde subvehi commeatus
 poterant, et si homines¹ iuvare velint, iniqua loca 11 sunt. Itaque non frustrabor ego vos castra hic

¹ homines γ: omnes Ω.

¹ Whom Diodorus follows (XIX. lxxii.).

² The Fasti Capitolini give his name in full as C. Fabius M. f. N. n. Ambustus, which makes him a brother of the dictator.

³ i.e. down the valley of the Liris, through the Samnite army, for the other way was blocked by the town of Sora.

were following and were already close at hand. B.C. 315 Whereupon the Romans marched to meet the enemy, and an indecisive battle was fought near Lautulae. It was not the losses nor the rout of either army that put a stop to the engagement, but darkness, which left them uncertain if they had lost or won. I find in some authorities¹ that the Romans were defeated in this battle, and that it was here that the master of the horse, Quintus Aulius, lost his life. To fill out the term of Aulius they appointed Gaius Fabius,² who marched from Rome with a fresh army. Sending messengers on ahead to the dictator, he consulted him as to where he should halt, and when, and from what quarter, attack the enemy. On being accurately informed regarding every detail of the dictator's plans, he halted where his army could lie concealed. For some days after the battle the dictator had kept his soldiers within their works, more like one besieged than a besieger. Then, suddenly, he displayed the battle-signal, and thinking it more efficacious for quickening the courage of brave men to leave none of them any hope but in himself, he concealed from his troops the arrival of the master of the horse and his new army, and, as though their only salvation lay in cutting their way through, "Soldiers," he said, "we are trapped and have no way of escape save such as victory shall open to us.³ Our standing camp is sufficiently protected by its rampart, but for lack of provisions is untenable; for every place round about us from which supplies could be brought up has revolted, and even if men wished to help us, the character of the country is against it. I will therefore not beguile you by leaving the camp standing here for you to relinquendo, in quae infecta victoria sicut pristino die vos recipiatis. Armis munimenta, non muni-12 mentis arma tuta esse debent. Castra habeant repetantque quibus operae est trahere bellum: nos

A.U.C.
439

 omnium rerum respectum praeterquam victoriae 13 nobis abscidamus. Ferte signa in hostem; ubi extra vallum agmen excesserit, castra quibus imperatum est incendant. Damna vestra, milites, omnium circa 14 qui defecerunt populorum praeda sarcientur." Et oratione dictatoris, quae necessitatis ultimae index
 erat, milites accensi vadunt in hostem, et respectus
 ipse ardentium castrorum, quinquam proximis tan-tum—ita enim iusserat dictator—ignis est subditus, 15 haud parvum fuit irritamentum. Itaque velut vecordes inlati signa primo impetu hostium turbant;
 et in tempore, postquam ardentia procul vidi castra,
 magister equitum—id convenerat signum—hostium terga invadit. Ita circumventi Samnites, qua potest 16 quisque, fugam per diversa petunt; ingens multitudo
 in unum metu congregata ac semet ipsam turba 17 impediens in medio caesa. Castra hostium capta direptaque, quorum praeda onustum militem in Romana castra dictator reducit, haudquaquam tam
 victoria laetum, quam quod praeter exiguum deformatam incendio partem cetera contra spem salva invenit.

A.U.C.
439

XXIV. Ad Soram inde reditum; novique consules
 M. Poetelius C. Sulpicius exercitum ab dictatore make a refuge, if you fail of victory, as on the former occasion. Entrenchments should be secured by arms, not arms by entrenchments. Let those have a camp, and retire to it, who have time to prolong the war: as for us, let us shut out all regard for everything but victory. Forward against the enemy! When the column is outside the rampart, let those who have been ordered to do so fire the camp! Your losses, men, shall be made good with the spoils of all the revolted peoples round about!" Inflamed by the dictator's speech, which pointed to the direst necessity, the soldiers advanced upon the foe; and the mere sight of their blazing camp as they glanced back, though only the nearest tents were set afire—for so the dictator had commanded—was no small whet to their resentment. And so, charging like madmen, they threw the enemy's ranks into confusion at the first assault; and in the nick of time the master of the horse, who had seen far away the burning camp—which was the signal they had agreed upon—assaulted the enemy from behind. Being thus hemmed in, the Samnites fled, as each best might, in different directions; a vast throng huddled up together, in their terror, and blocking each other's way in the confusion, were cut down where they stood. The enemy's camp was seized and plundered, and the soldiers, laden with the spoils, were led back by the dictator to the Roman camp, rejoicing not so greatly in their victory as because, contrary to their expectation, they found all safe there, except for a trifling part that had been damaged by the flames.

XXIV. The Romans then returned to Sora: and new consuls, Marcus Poetelius and Gaius Sulpicius,

Fabio accipiunt magna parte veterum militum dimissa novisque cohortibus in supplementum ad ductis. Ceterum cum propter difficultem urbis situm nec oppugnandi satis certa ratio iniretur et aut tempore longinqua aut praecipue periculo victoria esset, Soranus transfuga clam ex oppido profectus, cum ad vigiles Romanos penetrasset, duci se extemplo ad consules iubet deductusque traditurum urbem promittit. Visus¹ inde, cum quoniam modo id praestaturus esset percontantes doceret, haud vana adferre, perpulit prope adjuncta moenibus Romana castra ut sex milia ab oppido removerentur: fore ut minus intentae in custodiam urbis diurnae stationes ac nocturnae vigiliae essent. Ipse insequenti nocte sub oppido silvestribus locis cohortibus insidere iussis decem milites delectos secum per ardua ac prope invia in arcem ducit, pluribus quam pro numero virorum missilibus telis eo conlatis; ad hoc saxa erant et temere iacentia. ut fit in aspretis, et de industria etiam, quo locus tutior esset, ab oppidanis congesta.

Ubi cum constituisset Romanos semitamque angustam et arduam erectam ex oppido in arcem ostendisset, "Hoc quidem ascensu" inquit "vel tres armati quamlibet multitudinem arcuerint: vos et

¹ visus γ: iussus (or uissus) Ω.

¹ The legions had been three years in the field, although some of the soldiers, who had been enlisted to replace those killed or disabled, had not served so long. These latter were retained with the colours and the others were discharged. The word "cohorts" is anachronistic: Livy had perhaps forgotten that the organization by cohorts dated only from the time of Marius.

² Apparently conceived of as merely an unfortified and for the time being, unoccupied height.

took over the army from Fabius the dictator, dismissing a great part of the veteran troops and bringing in new cohorts to replace them.¹ But the city lay in a troublesome position, where the Romans could devise no very certain way of getting at it, and it seemed that victory would either be long in coming, or fraught with fearful risks; when a Soran deserter stole out of the town, and picking his way to the Roman sentinels, bade them bring him immediately to the consuls. Arrived in their presence, he offered to betray the city. On being questioned how he could accomplish it, he satisfied his interrogators that his plan was not unfeasible, and induced them to withdraw the Roman camp—which was almost in contact with the city walls—to a distance of six miles from the town; for so, he said, the sentinels would be less vigilant in guarding the place, whether by night or day. He himself on the following night, having directed certain cohorts to seek cover in the woods below the town, took with him ten picked men, whom he conducted over steep and almost impassable ground up to the citadel.² Here he had brought together a quantity of missiles out of all proportion to the number of men, besides which there were stones—both those which happened to be lying there, as is usual in rough country, and those which the townsmen had piled up on purpose, for the better protection of the place.

On this height he posted the Romans, and, indicating to them a steep and narrow path which led up from the town to the citadel, he said, “From an ascent like this three men would be enough to keep back a multitude, however numerous: you are not decem numero, et quod plus est, Romani Romano-rumque fortissimi viri estis. Et locus pro vobis et nox erit, quae omnia ex incerto maiora territis ostentat. Ego iam terrore omnia implebo: vos 9 arcem intenti tenete." Decurrit inde, quanto maxime poterat cum tumultu. "Ad arma!" et "Pro

vestram fidem, cives!" clamitans; "arx ab hostibus 10 capta est: defendite!"¹ Haec incidens principum foribus, haec obviis, haec excurrentibus in publicum pavidis increpat. Acceptum ab uno pavorem plures 11 per urbem ferunt. Trepidi magistratus missis ad arcem exploratoribus cum tela et armatos tenere
arcem multiplicato numero audirent, avertunt animos 12 a spe reciperandae arcis; fuga cuncta complentur portaeque ab semisomnis ac maxima parte inermibus refringuntur, quarum per unam praesidium Romanum
clamore excitatum intrumpit et concursantes per vias 13 pavidos caedit. Iam Sora capta erat, cum consules prima luce advenere et quos reliquos fortuna ex
nocturna caede ac fuga fecerat in ditionem 14 accipiunt. Ex his ducentos viginti quinque, qui omnium consensu destinabantur et infandae colonorum caedis et defectionis auctores, vinclitos Romam deducunt; ceteram multitudinem incolumem prae-15 sidio imposito Sorae relinquunt. Omnes qui Romam deducti erant virgis in foro caesi ac securi percussi, summo gaudio plebis, cuius maxime intererat tutam

¹ defendite A^x Madvig: defendite ite Ω: ite defendite Σ.

only ten, but Romans, and of Romans the very bravest. You will have the advantage of position and of night, which makes everything loom greater in the eyes of frightened men, because of the obscurity. As for me, I will presently strike terror into every heart: do you hold the citadel and watch." He then ran down, making all the noise he could, as he cried "To arms!" and "Help, help, my countrymen! The citadel has been taken by the enemy! Defend us!" These words he shouted as he knocked at the doors of the great, the same to all he met, the same to those who rushed out terrified into the streets. The panic begun by one man was spread by numbers through all the city. Quaking with fear, the magistrates dispatched scouts to investigate, and on hearing that armed men, in exaggerated numbers, held the citadel, relinquished all hope of regaining it. The city was thronged with fugitives, and men who were hardly yet awake and most of them unarmed, began battering down the gates. Through one of them rushed in the band of Romans, who had started up on hearing the outcry, and now running through the streets, cut down the frightened townsfolk. Sora was already taken, when the consuls arrived at early dawn, and received the surrender of such as Fortune had spared in the rout and slaughter of the night. Of these, two hundred and twenty-five, who were designated on all hands as the authors of the revolt and the hideous massacre of the colonists, they sent to Rome in chains; the rest they left unharmed in Sora, only setting a garrison over them. All those who were taken to Rome were scourged and beheaded in the Forum, to the great joy of the commons, whom it most ubique quae passim in colonias mitteretur multitudinem esse.

XXV. Consules ab Sora profecti in agros atque 2 urbes Ausonum bellum intulerunt. Mota namque omnia adventu Samnitium cum apud Lautulas dimicatum est fuerant, coniurationesque circa Cam- 3 paniam passim factae; nec Capua ipsa crimine caruit; quin Romam quoque et ad principum quosdam inquirendo ventum est. Ceterum Auso- num gens proditione urbium sicut Sora in potestaten- 4 venit. Ausona et Minturnae et Vescia¹ urbes erant ex quibus principes iuventutis duodecim numero in proditionem urbium suarum coniurati ad consules 5 veniunt. Docent suos iam pridem exoptantes Samnitium adventum, simul ad Lautulas pugnatum audierint,² pro victis Romanos habuisse, iuventute 6 armis Samnitem iuvisse: fugatis inde Samnitibus incerta pace agere nec claudentes portas Romanis, ne arcessant bellum, et obstinatos claudere, si exercitus admoveatur; in ea fluctuatione animorum 7 opprimi incautos posse. His auctoribus mota propius castra missique eodem tempore circa tria oppida milites, partim armati, qui occulti propinqua moenibus insiderent loca, partim togati tectis veste gladiis qui sub lucem apertis portis urbes ingrederentur.

¹ Vescia Sigonius (viii. xi. 5): uescina (uestina F.A^x) Ω.

² audierint Ruperti: audierunt Ω.

¹ Ausones is the Greek name for the Aurunci.

² Site unknown.

nearly concerned that the people who were sent out here and there to colonies should in every case be protected.

XXV. The consuls on leaving Sora conducted a campaign against the lands and cities of the Ausones.¹ For everything had been disturbed by the coming of the Samnites, when the battle was fought at Lautulae, and conspiracies had been formed all about Campania. Even Capua itself did not escape accusation; nay, the investigation actually led to Rome and to some of the prominent men there. But the Ausones were brought into subjection by the betrayal of their cities, as had happened in the case of Sora. From Ausona,² from Minturnae, and from Vescia, twelve young nobles, having conspired to betray their cities, came to the consuls, and explained to them that their countrymen, after long looking forward to the coming of the Samnites, had no sooner heard of the battle at Lautulae than they had concluded the Romans vanquished and had aided the Samnites with men and arms; that since the expulsion of the Samnites from that region, they had been living in an uncertain kind of peace, not closing their gates upon the Romans, lest to do so should invite attack, but determined none the less to close them in case an army should approach; and that in that wavering state of mind they could be surprised and overcome. By their advice the camp was moved up nearer and soldiers were simultaneously sent round to the three towns. Some of these, in armour, were to lie in ambush in places near the walls, while others, wearing the toga and concealing swords under their dress, were to enter the cities, a little before day, by the open gates.

A.U.C. 440 8 Ab his simul custodes trucidari coepti, simul datum signum armatis ut ex insidiis concurrerent. Ita portae occupatae triaque oppida eadem hora eodemque consilio capta; sed quia absentibus ducibus impetus est factus, nullus modus caedibus fuit, deleataque Ausonum gens vix certo defectionis crimen perinde ac si internecivo bello certasset.

XXVI. Eodem anno prodiit hostibus Romano praeſidio Luceria Samnitium facta. Nec diu proditoribus impunita res fuit: haud procul inde exercitus Romanos erat, cuius primo impetu urbs sita in plano capitur. Luciferini ac Samnites ad internacionem caesi; eoque ira processit ut Romae quoque, cum de colonis mittendis Luciferiam consulteretur senatus, multi delendam urbem censerent. Praeter odium, quod exsecrabile in bis captos erat, longinquitas quoque abhorrente a relegandis tam procul ab domo civibus inter tam infestas gentes cogebat. Vicit tamen sententia ut mitterentur coloni. Duo milia et quingenti missi.

Eodem anno, cum omnia infida Romanis essent, Capuae quoque occultae principum coniurationes factae. De quibus cum ad senatum relatum esset, haudquaquam neglecta res: quaestiones decretae dictatoremque quaestionibus exercendis dici placuit.

¹ With this sentence Livy resumes the narrative begun in Chap. XXV. §§ 1 and 2.

These latter fell upon the watchmen, at the same time making a signal to their fellows in armour to rush in from their ambuscade. Thus the gates were captured, and three towns were taken in one hour and by one device. But because the leaders were not present when the attack was made, there was no limit to the slaughter, and the Ausonian nation was wiped out—though it was not quite clear that it was guilty of defection—exactly as if it had contended in an interneine war.

XXVI. In the same year Lucezia, betraying its Roman garrison to the enemy, passed into the possession of the Samnites; but the traitors did not long go unpunished for their deed. Not far away there was a Roman army, which captured the city—situated as it was in a plain—at the first attack. The Lucerini and Samnites were shown no quarter, and resentment ran so high that even in Rome, when the senate was debating the dispatch of colonists to Lucezia, there were many who voted to destroy the town. Besides men's hate, which was very bitter against those whom they had twice subdued, there was also the remoteness of the place, which made them shrink from condemning fellow-citizens to an exile so far from home and surrounded by such hostile tribes. However, the proposal to send colonists prevailed, and twenty-five hundred were sent.

In that year also of general disloyalty to the Romans, there were secret conspiracies of the nobles, even at Capua.¹ On their being reported to the senate, the danger was by no means minimized, but tribunals of enquiry were voted and it was determined to appoint a dictator to conduct the

- 7 C. Maenius dictus; is M. Folium magistrum equitum dixit. Ingens erat magistratus eius terror. Itaque, sive is timor seu conscientia fuit,¹ Calavios² Ovium³ Noviumque—ea capita coniurationis fuerant—priusquam nominarentur apud dictatorem, mors haud dubie ab ipsis conscientia iudicio subtraxit.
- 8 Deinde ut quaestioni Campanae materia decessit, versa Romam interpretando res: non nominatim qui Capuae sed in universum qui usquam coissent coniurassentve adversus rem publicam quaeri senatum iussisse; et coitiones honorum adipiscendorum causa factas adversus rem publicam esse. Latiorque et re et personis quaestio fieri haud abnuente dictatore sine fine ulla quaestionis suae ius esse. Postulabantur ergo nobiles homines appellantibusque tribunos nemo erat auxilio quin nomina reciperentur.
- 11 Inde nobilitas, nec ii⁴ modo in quos crimen intendebatur sed universi, simul negare nobilium id crimen esse, quibus, si nulla obstetur fraude, pateat via ad honorem, sed hominum novorum; ipsos adeo dictatorem magistrumque equitum reos magis quam quaesidores idoneos eius criminis esse intellecturosque ita id esse, simul magistratu abissent.
- 13 Tum enimvero Maenius, iam famae magis quam imperii memor, progressus in contionem⁵ ita verba fecit: “Et omnes ante actae vitae vos consciros habeo,

¹ sive is timor seu conscientia fuit Madrig: siue timor seu conscientiae uis PF (or ius) OTD (or ius) LA² (and A⁴ over erasure): siuet (or siuei) timor seu conscientia eius M (or M¹ or M² over erasure): siue is timor seu conscientiae uis U.

² Calavios ζ: calabios Ω.

³ Ovium ζ: obium (or obuim) Ω.

⁴ ii ζ: hi (or hii) Ω: in PF: omitted by O.

⁵ contionem D⁴ζ: contione Ω.

investigations. Gaius Maenius was nominated, and named Marcus Folius master of the horse. Great was the terror inspired by that magistracy ; and so, whether from fear or a guilty conscience, the Calavii, Ovius and Novius, who had headed the conspiracy, before informations could be lodged against them with the dictator, avoided trial by a death which was undoubtedly self-inflicted.

After that, the field of enquiry at Capua having been exhausted, the proceedings were transferred to Rome, on the theory that the senate had ordered an investigation, not of specified individuals in Capua, but, in general, of all who had anywhere combined or conspired against the State; and that cabals for obtaining magistracies had been made against the common weal. The enquiry began to take a wider range, in respect both of charges and of persons, and the dictator was nothing loath that there should be no limit to the jurisdiction of his court. Certain nobles were accordingly impeached, and on appealing to the tribunes found none to help them by stopping the informations. The nobles then declared—not those alone at whom the charge was levelled, but all of them conjointly—that this accusation did not lie against the nobility, to whom, unless fraudulently obstructed, the road to office lay wide open, but rather against upstart politicians ; that in fact the dictator and the master of the horse themselves were fitter to be tried on such a charge than to act as judges, and they would find this to be so the moment they resigned their places.

Then indeed Maenius, more mindful now of his reputation than of his authority, came forward and addressed the assembly. “ You are all of you,” he

Quirites, et hic ipse honos delatus ad me testis est innocentiae meae; neque enim, quod saepe alias,
 quia ita tempora postulabant rei publicae, qui bello clarissimus esset, sed qui maxime procul ab his coitionibus vitam egisset, dictator deligendus exer-15 cendis quaestionibus fuit. Sed quoniam quidam nobiles homines—qua de causa vos existimare quam
 me pro magistratu quicquam incompertum dicere 16 melius est—primum ipsas expugnare quaestiones omni ope adnisi sunt, dein postquam ad id parum
 potentes erant, ne causam dicerent, in praesidia adversariorum, appellationem et tribunicium au-17 xilium, patricii confugerunt; postremo repulsi inde adeo omnia tutiora quam ut innocentiam suam purgarent visa—in nos inruerunt et privatis dicta-18 torem poscere reum verecundiae non fuit;—ut omnes di hominesque sciant ab illis etiam quae
 non possint temptari ne rationem vitae reddant, me
 obviam ire criminis et offerre me inimicis reum, 19 dictatura me abdio. Vos quaeso, consules, si vobis
 datum ab senatu negotium fuerit, in me primum et hunc M. Folium quaestiones exerceatis, ut appareat innocentia nostra nos non maiestate honoris tutos 20 a criminationibus istis esse.” Abdicat inde se dictatura et post eum confessim Folius magisterio equi-said, “Quirites, aware of my past life, and this very office which has been conferred upon me is witness to my innocence; for it was necessary to select as dictator for the administration of judicial investigations, not the most distinguished soldier—as has often been done at other times, when some crisis in the state required it—but the man who had lived a life most aloof from these cabals. But since certain noblemen—for what cause it is better that you should form your own opinion than that I as magistrate should affirm anything not fully ascertained—have in the first place striven with might and main to defeat these very investigations; and then, finding themselves not strong enough to escape pleading their cause in court, have sought refuge. patricians though they are, in the safeguards of their adversaries—the appeal, I mean, and the help of the tribunes;—and since at last, repulsed in that quarter, they have fallen upon us—so much safer does any course appear to them than to try to vindicate their innocence—and have not blushed, though private citizens, to demand the impeachment of a dictator;—in order that all gods and men may know that they are attempting even impossibilities to avoid accounting for their lives, whereas I am ready to face their charge and to offer myself to my enemies to be tried, I hereby resign the dictator’s authority. You, consuls, I beseech, if the task shall be devolved upon you by the senate, that you begin your investigations with me and with Marcus Folius here, that it may be seen that we are safe from these accusations by reason of our innocence, ~~not by~~ reason of the awe inspired by our office.” He then resigned as dictator, and so at once did Folius as master of the horse. They were tum; primique apud consules—iis enim ab senatu mandata res est—rei facti adversus nobilium testi-monia egregie absolvuntur. Publilius etiam Philo multiplicatis summis honoribus post res tot domi

 belloque gestas, ceterum invitus nobilitati, causam dixit absolutusque est. Nec diutius, ut fit, quam dum recens erat quaestio per clara nomina reorum viguit; inde labi coepit ad yiliora capita, donec coitionibus factionibusque adversus quas comparata erat oppressa est.

XXVII. Earum fama rerum, magis tamen spes Campanae defectionis, in quam coniuratum erat, Samnites in Apuliam versos rursus ad Caudium revocavit, ut inde ex propinquuo, si qui motus occasionem aperiret, Capuam Romanis eriperent. Eo consules cum valido exercitu venerunt. Et primo circa saltus, cum utrumque ad hostem iniqua via esset, cunctati sunt; deinde Samnites per aperta
 loca brevi circuitu in loca plana, Campanos campos,
 agmen demittunt,¹ ibique primum castra in conspectum² hostibus data, deinde levibus proeliis
 equitum saepius quam peditum utrumque periculum factum; nec aut eventus eorum Romanum aut morae, qua trahabant bellum, paenitebat. Samni-

¹ demittunt ζ : dimittunt Ω : dimatant (?) F.

² in conspectum Gronovius: in conspectu Ω : conspectu F.

¹ In 339 B.C. Philo had proposed three democratic laws, which won him the enmity of the patricians. See VIII. xii. 14–16.

the first to go to trial before the consuls—for to B.C. 314 these the senate had given the matter in charge—and, against the testimony of the nobles, were gloriously acquitted. Publilius Philo, too, after all his famous achievements at home and in war, and after having repeatedly held the highest offices, had incurred the hate of the nobility, and was brought to trial and acquitted.¹ But the inquisition, as often happens, had the vigour to deal with illustrious defendants no longer than while its novelty lasted; after that it began to descend to the baser sort, until it was finally put down by the cabals and factions which it had been instituted to oppose.

XXVII. The rumour of these events, and still more the hope of a Campanian insurrection, which had been the aim of the conspirators, recalled the Samnites from Apulia, on which their attention had been fixed, to Caudium; in the hope that, being there so near, they might, if any disturbance should afford the opportunity, seize Capua from the Romans; and to Caudium came the consuls, with a powerful force. Both armies at first held back, each on its own side of the pass, for either would have been at a disadvantage in advancing against the other. Then the Samnites made a short detour over open ground, and brought their army down to the plain, where the hostile forces were, for the first time, encamped in sight of one another. Some skirmishing followed, in which both sides made trial more often of their cavalry than their foot. The Romans were not dissatisfied either with the outcome of these brushes or with the delays by which the campaign was protracted. To the Samnite leaders, on the contrary, it appeared that

LIVY

A.U.C.
440 tium contra ducibus et carpi parvis cottidie damnis
et senescere dilatione belli vires suae videbantur.

7 Itaque in aciem procedunt equitibus in cornua divisis, quibus praeceptum erat intentiores ad re-spectum castrorum, ne qua eo vis fieret, quam¹ ad 8 proelium starent: aciem pedite² tutam fore. Consulum Sulpicius in dextro, Poetelius³ in laevo cornu consistunt. Dextra pars, qua et Samnites raris ordinibus aut ad circumfeudos hostes aut ne ipsi 9 circumirentur constiterant, latius patefacta stetit:
sinistris, praeterquam quod confertiores steterant, repentino consilio Poeteli consulis additae vires, qui subsidiarias cohortes, quae integrae ad longioris pugnae casus reservabantur, in primam aciem ex-templo emisit universisque hostem primo impetu 10 viribus impulit. Commota pedestri acie Samnitium eques in pugnam succedit. In hunc transverso agmine inter duas acies se inferentem Romanus equitatus concitat equos signaque et ordines pedi-tum atque equitum confundit, donec universam ab 11 ea parte avertit aciem. In eo cornu non Poetelius solus sed Sulpicius etiam hortator adfuerat, avectus
ab suis nondum conserentibus manus ad clamorem

¹ quam Gelenius ζ : cum Ω : et cum F.

² pedite U (anticipating Gronovius): pediti Ω : peditum Ax ζ .

³ Poetelius edd. (cf. chap. xxiv. § 1): potelius MPF:
petilius O: poetellius TD: petellius LA (similar corruptions in §§ 9 and 11, and at chap. xxviii. §§ 2, 5, 6).

¹ i.e. the Samnite right.

their forces were daily diminishing with petty losses, and were wasting away with the prolongation of the war.

They accordingly made ready for a general engagement, dividing their cavalry between the wings, with orders to pay more attention to the camp, to prevent any attack upon it, than to the battle; for the infantry would sufficiently safeguard the line. Of the consuls, Sulpicius took up his post on the right wing, Poetelius on the left. The formation on the right was spread out over a considerable distance, and on that wing the Samnites, too, were drawn up in ranks of little depth, either meaning to turn the Romans' flank, or to keep their own from being turned. The troops on the left, besides being drawn up in closer order, had received an accession to their strength from a plan conceived on the spur of the moment by Poetelius. For those subsidiary cohorts which were wont to be kept fresh in reserve, to meet the chance needs of a long engagement, he sent immediately into the fighting line; and by using all his strength at once, he forced the enemy back at the first assault. As the Samnite infantry wavered, their cavalry moved up to support them. But while they came obliquely onward, in the interval between the armies, the Roman cavalry charged them at the gallop, confounding the ranks and the formations of horse and foot, until they had routed the entire army at that point.¹ On that wing Sulpicius was present, as well as Poetelius, to animate the soldiers, for when the shouting arose upon the left, he had ridden over there, leaving his own men, who were not yet come to grips with

A.U.C. 12 a sinistra parte prius exortum. Unde haud dubiam ⁴⁴⁰ victoriam cernens cum ad suum cornu tenderet cum mille ducentis viris, dissimilem ibi fortunam invenit, Romanos loco pulsos, victorem hostem signa in 13 percusso inferentem. Ceterum omnia mutavit re-pente consulis adventus; nam et conspectu dueis refectus militum est animus, et maius quam pro
 numero auxilium advenerant fortes viri, et partis
 alterius Victoria audita mox visa etiam proelium 14 restituit. Tota deinde iam vincere acie Romanus et omissa certamine caedi capique Samnites, nisi qui Maleventum, cui nunc urbi Beneventum nomen
 est, perfugerunt. Ad triginta milia caesa aut capta Samnitium proditum memoriae est.

A.U.C. 441 XXVIII. Consules egregia Victoria parta protinus
 2 inde ad Bovianum oppugnandum legiones ducunt;
 ibique hiberna egerunt, donec ab novis consulibus,
 L. Papirio Cursore quintum C. Iunio Bubulco iterum nominatus dictator C. Poetelius cum M. Folio 3 magistro equitum exercitum accepit. Is cum audisset arcem Fregellanam ab Samnitibus captam, omisso Boviano ad Fregellas pergit. Unde nocturna Samnitium fuga sine certamine receptis Fregellis
 praesidioque valido imposito in Campaniam redditum
 4 maxime ad Nolam armis repetendam. Eo se intra-

¹ The city, which was a Greek colony, was called Μαλοφείς, which meant “Sheeptown” (or, perhaps, “Appleton”). The Romans corrupted the accusative case, Μαλοφέντα, to Maleventum, which they regarded as derived from male and venire, and then, to avoid the omen, changed it to Beneven-⁴tum when they planted a colony there, 268 B.C.

the enemy. But perceiving his colleague's victory ^{B.C. 314} to be safe, he left him and rode off with twelve hundred men to his own wing. There he found affairs in a different posture; the Romans had been driven out of their position, and the victorious enemy were charging their disordered ranks. But all was quickly changed by the arrival of the consul. For the sight of their general revived the spirits of the soldiers, and the brave men who followed him were a greater succour than their numbers indicated; and the tidings of their comrades' victory, which they soon saw for themselves, restored the battle. Presently the Romans had begun to conquer all along the line, while the Samnites, giving up the struggle, were massacred or made prisoners, except those who fled to Maleventum, the city which is now called Beneventum.¹ Tradition avers that some thirty thousand Samnites were slain or captured.

XXVIII. The consuls, who had won a brilliant ^{B.C. 313} victory, at once marched away to lay siege to Bovianum, where they remained in winter quarters, until the new consuls, Lucius Papirius Cursor (for the fifth time) and Gaius Junius Bubuleus (for the second) appointed Gaius Poetelius dictator, who, with Marcus Folius as master of horse, took over the command. Poetelius, hearing that the citadel of Fregellae was captured by the Samnites, raised the siege of Bovianum and proceeded to Fregellae. Having got possession of the place without a struggle—for the Samnites fled from it in the night—he installed a strong garrison there, and leaving Fregellae, marched back into Campania, for the purpose, chiefly, of winning back Nola by force of moenia sub adventum dictatoris et Samnitium omnis

A.U.C.
441

 multitudo et Nolana agrestis contulerat.¹ Dictator
 5 urbis situ circumspecto, quo apertior aditus ad moenia esset, omnia aedificia—et frequenter ibi habitabatur—circumiecta muris incendit; nec ita
 multo post, sive a Poetelio dictatore sive ab C.
 Iunio consule—nam utrumque traditur,—Nola est
 6 capta. Qui captae decus Nolae ad consulem trahunt, adiciunt Atinam et Calatiam ab eodem captas, Poetelium autem pestilentia orta clavi figendi causa dictatorem dictum.

7 Suessa et Pontiae eodem anno coloniae deductae
 sunt. Suessa Auruncorum fuerat; Volsci Pontias, insulam sitam in conspectu litoris sui, incoluerant.
 8 Et Interamnam Sucasinam² ut dederetur colonia, senati consultum³ factum est; sed triumviros creavere ac misere colonorum quattuor milia insequentes consules M. Valerius P. Decius.

A.U.C.
442

XXIX. Profligato⁴ fere Samnitium bello, priusquam ea cura decederet patribus Romanis, Etrusci
 2 belli fama exorta est. Nec erat ea tempestate gens alia cuius secundum Gallicos tumultus arma terri-

¹ et Nolana agrestis contulerat codd. Gelen.: et nolani agrestes (agrestis O agrestas PFD? LA) contulerat (-et F, -ant AM³ or M⁴ T¹ or T² L³) Ω.

² Sucasinam Mommse (Plin. N.H. III. v. 64): casinam
MT: casinum Ω.

³ senati consultum Alscheffski: sic (or sic.) Ω: sicut U: senatus consultum Σ.

⁴ profligato Σ: M. Valerio P. Decio coss. (or cōs or coñs.)
 profligato Ω: p̄ decio coss profligato TDLA.

¹ For the practice of driving a nail in the wall of the shrine of Minerva in the great temple of Jupiter on the Capitol, see VII. iii. But the writers referred to in the present passage are probably mistaken, as the Fasti arms. Within its walls, as the dictator drew near, ^{B.C. 313} the whole Samnite population and the Nolani of the country-side had taken refuge. After examining the position of the city, the dictator, in order to open up approaches to the walls, caused all the buildings round them—and the tract was densely inhabited—to be burnt. Not very long after this Nola was captured, whether by Poetelius the dictator or the consul Gaius Junius—for the story is told both ways. Those who ascribe the honour of capturing Nola to the consul, add that Atina and Calatia were won by the same man, but that Poetelius was made dictator on the outbreak of a pestilence, that he might drive the nail.¹

Colonies were planted in that same year at Suessa and Pontiae. Suessa had belonged to the Aurunci; Volscians had inhabited Pontiae, an island which lay within sight of their own coast. The senate also passed a resolution that a colony be sent out to Interamna Sucasina,² but it was left for the next consuls, Marcus Valerius and Publius Decius, to appoint the three commissioners and send out four thousand settlers.

XXIX. The war with the Samnites was practically ^{B.C. 312} ended, but the Roman senators had not yet ceased to be concerned about it, when the rumour of an Etruscan war sprang up. In those days there was no other race—setting apart the risings of the Gauls Capitolini say that Poetelius was made dictator rei gerundae causa.

² So called (or sometimes Lirenas) to distinguish it from two other towns called Interamna—a name which is derived from the two streams (in this case the Casinus and the Liris) at whose confluence the town was situated.

A.U.O.
442

biliora essent cum propinquitate agri tum multi-3 tudine hominum. Itaque altero consule in Samnio reliquias belli persequente P. Decius, qui graviter aeger Romae restiterat, auctore senatu dictatorem C. Sulpicium Longum, is magistrum equitum C.
 4 Iunium Bubulcum¹ dixit. Is, prout rei magnitudo postulabat, omnes iuniores sacramento adigit, arma quaeque alia res poscit summa industria parat; nec
 tantis apparatus elatus de inferendo bello agitat, quieturus haud dubie, nisi ultiro arma Etrusci infer-5 rent. Eadem in comparando cohibendoque bello consilia et apud Etruscos fuere: neutri finibus egressi.

Et censura clara eo anno Ap. Claudi et C. Plauti fuit; memoriae tamen felicioris ad posteros nomen
 6 Appi, quod viam munivit et aquam in urbem duxit;
 7 eaque unus perfecit, quia ob infamem atque invidiosam senatus lectionem verecundia victus collega 8 magistratu se abdicaverat; Appius iam inde anti-quitus insitam pertinaciam familiae gerendo solus 9 censuram obtinuit. Eodem Appio auctore Potitia gens, cuius ad aram maximam Herculis familiare sacerdotium fuerat, servos publicos ministerii dele-

¹ dictatorem C. Sulpicium Longum, is magistrum equitum C. Bubulcum Sigonius and Pighius (from the Fasti Capitolini): dictatorem C. Iunium Bubulcum Ω.

¹ The road was the Via Appia, which ran from Rome to Capua, and was later extended to Beneventum and, finally, to Brundisium. The aqueduct brought water from a point between seven and eight miles out, on the road to Gabii, and supplied the Circus Maximus and other low-lying parts of the City.

² An ancient altar erected in honour of Hercules. The origin of the cult is described at I. vii. 3-15.

—whose arms were more dreaded, not only because their territory lay so near, but also because of their numbers. Accordingly, while the other consul was in Samnium, dispatching the last remnants of the war, Publius Decius, who was very sick and had stopped behind in Rome, in pursuance of a senatorial resolution named Gaius Sulpicius Longus dictator, who appointed Gaius Junius Bubuleus to be his master of the horse. Sulpicius, as the gravity of the circumstances required, administered the oath to all those of military age, and made ready arms and whatever else the situation called for, with the utmost assiduity. Yet he was not so carried away with these great preparations as to plan for an offensive war, clearly intending to remain inactive, unless the Etruscans should first take the field. But the Etruscans followed the same policy, preparing for war but preventing it from breaking out. Neither side went beyond their own frontiers.

Noteworthy, too, in that year was the censorship of Appius Claudius and Gaius Plautius; but the name of Appius was of happier memory with succeeding generations, because he built a road, and conveyed a stream of water into the City.¹ These undertakings he carried out by himself, since his colleague had resigned, overcome with shame at the disgraceful and invidious manner in which Appius revised the list of senators; and Appius, exhibiting the obstinacy which had marked his family from the earliest days, exercised the censorship alone. It was Appius, too, by whose warranty the Potitian clan, with whom the priesthood of Hercules at the Ara Maxima² was hereditary, taught the ritual of that sacrifice to public slaves,

A.U.C. 10 gandi causa sollemnia eius sacri docuerat. Traditur ⁴⁴² inde, dictu mirabile et quod dimovendis statu suo sacris religionem facere posset, cum duodecim familiae
 ea tempestate Potitiorum essent, puberes ad triginta, 11 omnes intra annum cum stirpe exstinetos; nec nomen tantum Potitiorum interisse sed censorem etiam memori deum ira post aliquot annos luminibus captum.

A.U.C.
⁴⁴³ XXX. Itaque consules qui eum annum seuti sunt, C. Iunius Bubuleus tertium et Q. Aemilius Barbula iterum, initio anni questi apud populum
 2 deformatum ordinem prava lectione senatus, qua potiores aliquot lectis praeteriti essent, negaverunt eam lectionem se, quae sine recti pravique discrimine ad gratiam ac libidinem facta esset, observaturos et senatum extemplo citaverunt eo ordine
 qui ante censores Ap. Claudium et C. Plautium 3 fuerat. Et duo imperia¹ eo anno dari copta per populum, utraque pertinentia ad rem militarem:
 unum, ut tribuni militum seni deni in quattuor
 legiones a populo crearentur, quae antea perquam paucis suffragio populi relictis locis dictatorum et consulum ferme fuerant beneficia—tulere eam rogationem tribuni plebei L. Atilius C. Marcius;—
 4 alterum, ut duumviros navales classis ornandae

¹ imperia Δ : feria M : ministeria Madrig.

¹ For an instance of the popular election of tribuni militum cf. VII. v. 9. The plan adopted in 311 seems to have given the people the right to elect four of the six tribunes assigned to each legion, or sixteen in all. Soon after Livy wrote these words another change was made and the emperor thenceforth appointed all military tribunes.

in order to devolve the service upon them. Tradition ^{B.C. 312} relates that after this a strange thing happened, and one that might well give men pause ere they disturb the established order of religious ceremonies. For whereas at that time there were twelve families of the Potitii, and grown men to the number of thirty, within the year they had perished, every man, and the stock had become extinct; and not only did the name of the Potitii die out, but even the censor, by the unforgetting ire of the gods, was a few years later stricken blind.

XXX. And so the consuls of the following year, ^{B.C. 311} Gaius Junius Bubuleus (for the third time) and Quintus Aemilius Barbula (for the second), complained to the people, at the outset of their administration, that the senatorial order had been depraved by the improper choice of members, in which better men had been passed over than some that had been appointed. They then gave notice that they should ignore that list, which had been drawn up with no distinction of right and wrong, in a spirit of favouritism and caprice; and proceeded to call the roll of the senate in the order which had been in use before Appius Claudius and Gaius Plautius were censors. In that year, also, two commands—both military—began to be conferred by the people; for it was enacted, first, that sixteen tribunes of the soldiers should be chosen by popular vote for the four legions, whereas previously these places had been for the most part in the gift of dictators and consuls, very few being left to popular suffrage¹; secondly, that the people should likewise elect two naval commissioners to have charge of equipping and refitting the fleet. The former of reficiendaeque causa idem populus iuberet; lator huius plebi sciti fuit M. Decius tribunus plebis.

5 Eiusdem anni rem dictu parvam praeterirem, ni
ad religionem visa esset pertinere. Tibicines, quia prohibiti a proximis censoribus erant in aede Iovis
vesci quod traditum antiquitus erat, aegre passi
Tibur uno agmine abierunt, adeo ut nemo in urbe
6 esset qui sacrificiis praecineret. Eius rei religio tenuit senatum, legatosque Tibur miserunt darent¹
operam, ut ii² homines Romanis restituerentur.
7 Tiburtini benigne polliciti primum accitos eos in curiam hortati sunt uti reverterentur Romam;
postquam perpelli nequibant, consilio haud abhor-8 rente ab ingeniis hominum eos adgrediuntur. Die festo alii alios per speciem celebrandarum cantu
epularum invitant³ et vino, cuius avidum ferme id 9 genus⁴ est, oneratos sopiunt atque ita in plaustra somno vinetos coniciunt ac Romam deportant. Nec prius sensere quam plaustris in foro relictis plenos 10 crapulae eos lux oppressit. Tunc concursus populi factus, impetratoque ut manerent, datum ut triduum quotannis ornati cum cantu atque hac quae nunc sollemnis est licentia per urbem vagarentur, restitu-

¹ darent Gronovius: ut darent Ω .

² ut ii A² Alscheski Madvig: ut hii M: ut hi PF: ut id OTDLA.

³ invitant ζ : causa inuitant Ω .

⁴ id gen $s\zeta$: genus Ω .

these measures was proposed by the tribunes of the plebs Lucius Atilius and Gaius Marcius; the latter by Marcus Decius, another tribune of the plebs.

I should omit, as an incident hardly worth narrating, a little thing that happened in that same year, but that it seemed to concern religion. The flute-players, angry at having been forbidden by the last censors to hold their feast, according to old custom, in the temple of Jupiter, went off to Tibur in a body, so that there was no one in the City to pipe at sacrifices. Troubled by the religious aspect of the case, the senate dispatched representatives to the Tiburtines, requesting them to use their best endeavours to restore these men to Rome. The Tiburtines courteously undertook to do so; and sending for the pipers to their senate-house, urged them to return. When they found it impossible to persuade them, they employed a ruse, not ill-adapted to the nature of the men. On a holiday various citizens invited parties of the pipers to their houses, on the pretext of celebrating the feast with music. There they plied them with wine, which people of that profession are generally greedy of, until they got them stupefied. In this condition they threw them, fast asleep, into waggons and carried them away to Rome; nor did the pipers perceive what had taken place until daylight found them—still suffering from the debauch—in the waggons, which had been left standing in the Forum. The people then flocked about them and prevailed with them to remain. They were permitted on three days in every year to roam the City in festal robes, making music and enjoying the licence that is now customary, and to such tumque in aede vescendi ius iis¹ qui sacris praecinerent. Haec inter duorum ingentium bellorum curam gerebantur.

XXXI. Consules inter se provincias partiti: Iunio Samnites, Aemilio novum bellum Etruria sorte obvenit. In Samnio Cluiarum² praesidium Romanum, quia nequiverat vi capi, obsessum fame in deditonem acceperant Samnites verberibusque foedum in modum laceratos occiderant deditos. Huic infensus crudelitati Iunius, nihil antiquius oppugnatione Cluviana ratus, quo die adgressus est moenia vi cepit atque omnes puberes interfecit. Inde victor exercitus Bovianum ductus. Caput hoc erat Pentrorum Samnitium, longe ditissimum atque opulentissimum armis virisque. Ibi quia haud tantum irarum erat, spe praedae milites accensi oppido potiuntur. Minus itaque saevitum in hostes est; praedae plus paene quam ex omni Samnio unquam egestum benigneque omnis militi concessa.

6 Et postquam praepotentem armis Romanum nec acies subsistere ulla nec castra nec urbes poterant, omnium principum in Samnio eo curae sunt intentae ut insidiis quaereretur locus, si qua licentia populo effusus exercitus excipi ac circumveniri posset.
 7 Transfugae agrestes et captivi quidam, pars forte, pars consilio oblati, congruentia ad consulem adfe-

¹ iis ζ : his Ω : in (or iu) hiis A hiis A².

² Cluiarum Walters: cluuiaru (?) O : cluuiani (cluiani P) Ω : duliani T : duuiani T¹.

¹ The story of the secession of the flute-players is found also in Ovid, Fasti, vi. 651 ff., and Plutarch, Quaestiones Romanae, 55. The three days (the so-called "lesser Quinquatrus") were June 13th, 14th, 15th, and were a festival peculiar to the guild of pipers.

² The site of Cluviae is not known.

as should play at sacrifices was given again the B.C. 511 privilege of banqueting in the temple.¹ These incidents occurred while men were preoccupied with two mighty wars.

XXXI. The consuls divided the commands between them: to Junius the lot assigned the Samnites, to Aemilius the new war with Etruria. In Samnium the Roman garrison at Cluviae,² which had defended itself successfully against assault, was starved into submission. The Samnites, having scourged their prisoners in brutal fashion, put them to death; although they had surrendered. Incensed by this act of cruelty, Junius felt that nothing should take precedence over an attack on Cluviae. He carried the place by storm on the day he arrived before it, and slew all the grown-up males. From there he led his victorious army to Bovianum. This was the capital of the Pentrian Samnites, a very wealthy city and very rich in arms and men. Against this town the soldiers were not so exasperated, but the hope of plunder spurred them on to capture it. And so there was less severity shown to the enemy, but there was almost more booty carried out than was ever collected from all the rest of Samnium, and the whole of it was generously made over to the soldiers.

When the conquering arms of the Romans might now no longer be withstood by any embattled host or camp or city, the leaders of the Samnites all eagerly directed their attention to the seeking out a place for an ambush, on the chance that the army might somehow be permitted to disperse for plundering, and so be surprised and surrounded. Certain rustic deserters and prisoners, some falling into the consul's hands by accident and some on purpose,

A.U.C.
443

rentes—quae et vera erant—pecoris vim ingentem
 in saltum avium compulsam esse, perpulerunt ut 8 praedatum eo expeditae ducerentur legiones. Ibi ingens hostium exercitus itinera occultus insederat,
 et postquam intrasse Romanos vidi saltum, repente
 exortus cum clamore ac tumultu incautos invadit.
 9 Et primo nova res trepidationem fecit, dum arma capiunt, sarcinas congerunt in medium; dein postquam, ut quisque liberaverat se onere aptaveratque arma,¹ ad signa undique coibant et notis ordinibus
 in vetere disciplina militiae iam sine praecepto 10 ullius sua sponte struebatur acies, consul ad ancipitem maxime pugnam advectus desilit ex equo et Iovem Martemque atque alios testatur deos se nullam suam gloriam inde sed praedam militi 11 quaerentem in eum locum devenisse neque in se aliud quam nimiam ditandi ex hoste militis curam
 reprehendi posse; ab eo se dedecore nullam rem 12 aliam quam virtutem militum vindicaturam. Coniterentur modo uno animo omnes invadere hostem victum acie, castris exutum, nudatum urbibus, ultimam spem furto insidiarum temptantem et loco 13 non armis fretum. Sed quem esse iam virtuti Romanae inexpugnabilem locum? Fregellana arx Soranaque et ubicumque iniquo successum erat loco memorabantur.

¹ arma Gronovius: armis Ω.

by giving all the same account—and a true one, B.C. 311 too—of enormous flocks that had been brought together in an inaccessible mountain meadow, persuaded him to lead thither his legions in light marching order to seize the booty. There a great army of the enemy had secretly beset the ways, and seeing that the Romans had entered the pass, rose up suddenly with much din and shouting and fell upon them unawares. At first the unexpectedness of the attack occasioned some trepidation, while the soldiers were putting on their armour and piling their packs in the midst. Afterwards, when everyone had got rid of his encumbrance and had armed himself, they began to assemble from every side about their standards. In the course of a long training in the army they had become familiar with their places, and formed a line of their own accord, without anyone's direction. The consul, riding up to the place where the fighting was most critical, leaped down from his horse, and called on Jupiter and Mars and the other gods to witness that he had come there seeking no glory for himself, but only booty for his soldiers : his sole fault, he said, was a too great desire to enrich his men ; from this disgrace nothing could save him but their courage. Only let them all unite in singleness of purpose to assail an enemy conquered in battle, stripped of his camp, deprived of his cities, and pinning his last hopes to the treachery of an ambuscade, where his trust was in his position, not in arms. But what position was there now, he demanded, too strong for Roman valour to overwhelm ? He reminded them of Fregellae's citadel and Sora's, and all the places where they had triumphed over disadvantage of ground.

LIVY

A.U.C. 14 His aceensus miles, omnium immemor difficulta-443 tum, vadit adversus imminentem hostium aciem.
 Ibi paulum laboris fuit, dum in adversum clivum 15 erigitur agmen; ceterum postquam prima signa planitiem summam ceperunt sensitque acies aequo se iam institisse loco, versus extemplo est terror in insidiatores easdemque latebras quibus se paulo
 ante texerant palati atque inermes fuga repetebant.
 16 Sed loca difficilia hosti quaesita ipsos tum sua fraude impediebant. Itaque ergo perpaucis effugium patuit; caesa ad viginti milia hominum victorque Romanus ad oblatam ab hoste praedam pecorum discurrit.

XXXII. Dum haec geruntur in Samnio, iam omnes Etruriae populi praeter Arretinos ad arma ierant, ab oppugnando Sutrio, quae urbs socia Romanis
 2 velut claustra Etruriae erat, ingens orsi bellum. Eo alter consul Aemilius cum exercitu ad liberandos obsidione socios venit. Advenientibus Romanis Sutrini commeatus benigne in castra ante urbem
 3 posita advexere. Etrusei diem primum consultando maturarent traherentne bellum traduxerunt. Postero die, ubi celeriora quam tutiora consilia magis pla-

¹ The Fasti Capitolini record that Junius triumphed over the Samnites on August 5th (C.I.L., I², p. 45).

Roused by these words, the soldiers disregarded every obstacle and advanced against the battle-line which their enemies had formed above them. There was a little hard fighting there, while the column was mounting the slope; but as soon as the foremost companies had reached the plateau at the top, and the soldiers perceived that their line was now established on level ground, the panic was straightway turned upon the waylayers, who fled, dispersing and throwing down their arms, in search of those very lurking-places where a little while before they had concealed themselves. But the ground which they had sought out for the difficulties it presented to an enemy caught the Samnites themselves in a trap of their own devising. And so, very few were able to get off: about twenty thousand men were slain; and the victorious Romans struck out this way and that to collect the booty of cattle which the enemy had thrown in their way.¹

XXXII. While these events were taking place in Samnium, all the peoples of Etruria, except the Arretini, had already armed, and beginning with the siege of Sutrium, a city in alliance with the Romans, and forming as it were the key to Etruria, had set on foot a tremendous war. Thither the other consul, Aemilius, came with an army, to relieve the blockade of the allies. As the Romans came up, the Sutrini obligingly brought provisions to their camp, which was formed before the city. The Etruscans spent the first day in deliberating whether to accelerate the war or to draw it out. On the following day, their generals having decided on the swifter plan in preference to the safer, the

cuere ducibus, sole orto signum pugnae propositum
 4 est armatique in aciem procedunt. Quod postquam consuli nuntiatum est, extemplo tesseram dari iubet
 ut prandeat miles firmatisque cibo viribus arma 5 capiat. Dicto paretur. Consul ubi armatos para-tosque vidit, signa extra vallum proferri iussit et haud procul hoste instruxit aciem. Aliquamdiu intenti utrimque steterunt exspectantes, ut ab ad-6 versariis clamor et pugna inciperet; et prius sol meridie se inclinavit quam telum hinc aut illinc emissum est. Inde, ne infecta re abiretur, clamor ab Etruscis oritur concinuntque tubae et signa inferuntur. Nec segnius a Romanis pugna initur.
 7 Concurrunt infensis animis; numero hostis, virtute
 8 Romanus superat; anceps proelium multos utrimque et fortissimum quemque absunit, nec prius inclinata
 res est quam secunda acies Romana ad prima signa, 9 integri fessis, successerunt, Etrusci,¹ quia nullis
 recentibus subsidiis fulta prima acies fuit, ante signa circaque omnes ceciderunt. Nullo unquam proelio fugae minus nec plus caedis fuisset, ni obstinatos 10 mori Tuscos nox texisset, ita ut victores prius quam victi pugnandi finem facerent. Post occasum solis signum receptui datum est; nocte utroque² in castra redditum.

¹ successerunt, Etrusci Walters and Conway: successerunt.
 Etrusci edd.

² utroque Malvig: ab utroque Ω: utrobique Walters and Conway (note).

signal for battle was displayed at sunrise and their men in fighting array marched out upon the field. When this was reported to the consul, he at once commanded the word to be passed round that the men should breakfast, and having recruited their strength with food, should then arm. The order was obeyed; and the consul, seeing them equipped and ready, bade advance the standards beyond the rampart, and drew up his troops a little way off from the enemy. For some time both sides stood fast, observing one another closely, each waiting for the other to give a cheer and begin to fight, and the sun had begun his downward course in the heavens ere a missile was hurled on either side. Then the Etruscans, that they might not withdraw without accomplishing their purpose, set up a shout, and with sound of trumpets advanced their ensigns. The Romans were equally prompt to begin the battle. The two armies rushed together with great fury, the enemy having a superiority in numbers, the Romans in bravery. Victory hung in the balance and many perished on both sides, including all the bravest, and the event was not decided until the Roman second line came up with undiminished vigour to relieve their exhausted comrades in the first; and the Etruscans, whose fighting line was supported by no fresh reserves, all fell in front of their standards and around them. There would never in any battle have been more bloodshed or less running away, but when the Etruscans were resolved to die, the darkness shielded them, so that the victors gave over fighting before the vanquished. The sun had set when the recall was sounded, and in the night both armies retired to their camps.

A.U.C. 11 Nec deinde quicquam eo anno rei memoria dignae
 443 apud Sutrium gestum est, quia et ex hostium exercitu prima tota acies deleta uno proelio fuerat subsidiariis modo relictis, vix quod satis esset ad

A.U.C. 12 castrorum praesidium, et apud Romanos tantum vulnerum fuit ut plures post proelium saucii decesserint quam ceciderant in acie. XXXIII. Q. Fabius, insequentis anni consul, bellum ad Sutrium excepit, collega Fabio C. Marcius Rutulus¹ datus 444 2 est. Ceterum et Fabius supplementum ab Roma adduxit et novus exercitus domo accitus Etruscis venit.

3 Permulti anni iam erant cum inter patricios magistratus tribunosque nulla certamina fuerant, cum ex ea familia cui velut fato lis² cum tribunis

4 ac plebe erat certamen oritur. Ap. Claudius censor circumactis decem et octo mensibus quod Aemilia lege finitum censurae spatium temporis erat, cum C. Plautius collega eius magistratu se abdicasset, nulla

5 vi compelli ut abdicaret potuit. P. Sempronius erat tribunus plebis, qui finiendae censurae intra legitimum tempus actionem susceperat, non popularem magis quam iustum nec in volgus quam optimo

6 cuique gratiorem. Is cum identidem legem Aemiliam recitaret auctoremque eius Mam. Aemilium dictatorem laudibus ferret, qui quinquennalem ante censuram et longinquitate potestatis³ dominantem

7 intra sex mensum et anni coegisset spatium, "Die agedum" inquit, "Appi Claudi, quidnam facturus

¹ Rutulus Conway: rutilius (rutilus T?) Ω.

² cui velut fato lis M. Seyffert: quae uelut fatalis Ω: quae uelut fatales MPTDL.

³ potestatis Crévier: potestatem Ω.

¹ 434 B.C. (IV. xxiv. 5).

Thereafter there was nothing done that year at Sutrium worth recording. The enemy had lost their whole first line in a single engagement, and had only their reserves remaining, who barely sufficed to garrison their camp; whilst the Romans had so many wounded that more died of their hurts after the battle than had fallen on the field.

XXXIII. Quintus Fabius, consul in the following year, took over the campaign at Sutrium. For colleague he was given Gaius Marcius Rutulus. Fabius brought up replacements from Rome, and a new army came from Etruria to reinforce the enemy.

For a great many years now there had been no contests between the patrician magistrates and the tribunes, when a dispute arose through that family which was fated, as it seemed, to wrangle with the tribunes and with the plebs. Appius Claudius the censor, on the expiration of the eighteen months which had been fixed by the Aemilian law¹ as the limit of the censorship, although his colleague Gaius Plautius had abdicated, could himself by no compulsion be prevailed upon to do likewise. It was Publius Sempronius, a tribune of the people, who commenced an action to confine the censorship to its legal limits—an action no less just than popular, and as welcome to every aristocrat as to the common people. Having repeatedly read out the Aemilian law, and praised its author, Mamercus Aemilius the dictator, for confining the censorship—which had until then been tenable for five years and was proving despotic by reason of the long continuance of its authority—within the space of a year and a half, he said, “Come, tell us, Appius Claudius, what

A.U.C.
444 fueris, si eo tempore quo C. Furius et M. Geganius
8 censores fuerunt censor fuisses." Negare Appius interrogationem tribuni magno opere ad causam 9 pertinere suam; nam etsi tenuerit lex Aemilia eos censores quorum in magistratu lata esset, quia post illos censores creatos eam legem populus iussisset
quodque postremum iussisset id ius ratumque esset,
non tamen aut se aut eorum quemquam qui post
eam legem latam creati censores essent teneri ea
lege potuisse.

XXXIV. Haec sine ullius adsensu cavillante Appio
"En"¹ inquit, "Quirites, illius Appi progenies, qui decemvir in annum creatus altero anno se ipse
creavit, tertio nec ab se nec ab ullo creatus privatus
2 fasces et imperium obtinuit, nec ante continuando
abstitit magistratu quam obruerent eum male parta,
3 male gesta, male retenta imperia. Haec est eadem familia, Quirites, cuius vi atque iniuriis compulsi extorres patria Sacrum montem cepistis; haec ad-versus quam tribunicium auxilium vobis comparas-4 tis; haec propter quam duo exercitus Aventinum insedistis; haec quae fenebres leges, haec quae
5 agrarias semper impugnavit. Haec conubia patrum

¹ "En" Aldus: ē FO: est Ω.

¹ Appius held that, whereas the election of Furius and Geganius for a period of five years had been set aside by the Aemilian law, which was then the latest enactment on the subject and so replaced any earlier one, nevertheless all those who were elected subsequently derived their powers from still later enactments, by which in its turn the Aemilian law was superseded.

² For the story of the Decemvir, see III. xxxiii-lviii.

³ II. xxxii. 2.

you would have done had you been censor at the time when Gaius Furius and Marcus Geganius were censors.”¹ Appius replied that the tribune’s question had no particular bearing upon his own case; for even though the Aemilian law had bound those censors in whose term of office it had been passed, because the people had enacted the law after their election to the censorship and their latest enactment was always the effective law, yet neither himself nor any one of those who had been chosen censors subsequently to the passage of that law could have been bound by it.¹

XXXIV. While Appius raised these quibbles, but found no one to support him, “Behold, Quirites,” said Sempronius, “the descendant of that Appius, who having been elected decemvir for one year, himself declared his own election for a second year, and in the third, although a private citizen, with neither his own nor another’s warrant of election, retained the fasces and authority, and relinquished not his hold on the magistracy until he was overwhelmed by his ill-gotten, ill-administered, and ill-continued powers.² It was this same family, Quirites, under compulsion of whose violence and abuse you banished yourselves from your native City and occupied the Sacred Mount³; the same against which you provided yourselves with the help of tribunes⁴; the same, because of which two armies of you encamped upon the Aventine⁵; the same that has ever attacked the laws restricting usury and throwing open the public lands.⁶ This same

¹ II. xxxiii. 1-3.

⁵ III. I. 13, and li. 10.

⁶ II. xxix. 9; xliv. 1; lxi. 1; VI. xl. 11.

A.U.C.
444

et plebis interruptus : haec plebi ad curules magistratus iter obsaepsit. Hoc est nomen multo quam Tarquiniorum infestius vestrae libertati. Itane tandem, Appi Claudi? Cum centesimus iam annus sit ab Mam. Aemilio dictatore, tot censores fuerunt,¹ nobilissimi fortissimique viri, nemo eorum duodecim tabulas legit? Nemo id ius esse, quod postremo populus iussisset, sciit? Immo vero omnes scierunt² et ideo Aemiliae potius legi paruerunt quam illi antiquae qua primum censores creati erant, quia hanc postremam iusserat populus, et quia, ubi duas contrariae leges sunt, semper antiquae obrogat nova.

“An hoc dicis, Appi, non teneri Aemilia lege populum? An populum teneri, te unum exlegem esse? Tenuit Aemilia lex violentos illos censores C. Furium³ et M. Geganium, qui quid iste magistratus in re publica mali⁴ facere posset indicarunt, cum ira finitiae potestatis Mam. Aemilium, principem aetatis suae belli domique, aerarium fecerunt; tenuit deinceps omnes censores intra centum annorum spatiū; tenet C. Plautium, collegam tuum iisdem⁵ auspiciis, eodem iure creatum. An hunc non ut qui optimo iure censor creatus esset populus creavit? Tu unus eximius es in quo hoc praecipuum ac singu-

¹ fuerunt (fueſī) F; fuerin Ω.² scierunt H. J. Mueller: sciuerunt Ω: scierint DA.³ C. Furium ς: īn. furium Ω.⁴ mali A² (or A¹): male Ω: mala M.⁵ iisdem ς: isdem T²: hiisdem A: hisdem Ω.

family broke off marriages between patricians and plebeians¹; this same family blocked the path of the plebeians to curule offices.² It is a name that is far more hostile to your liberty than that of the Tarquinii. So, Appius Claudius! Though it is now a hundred years since Mamercus Aemilius was dictator, and in that time we have had all these censors, high-born and valiant men, has never one of them inspected the Twelve Tables? Has none of them known that the law was that which the people had last enacted? Nay, all of them knew it; and they obeyed the Aemilian law in preference to that ancient ordinance which governed the first elections of censors, precisely because it was the latest which the people had enacted, and because in a conflict of two laws the old is ever superseded by the new.

"Or will this be your contention, Appius, that the people is not bound by the Aemilian law? Or that the people is bound, but that you alone are exempt? The Aemilian law bound those violent censors Gaius Furius and Marcus Geganius, who showed what mischief that magistracy could accomplish in the state, when, in their rage at the abridgment of their powers, they reduced Mamercus Aemilius, the foremost man of his time in war and peace, to the lowest class of citizens; it bound all the censors who succeeded them, for the period of a hundred years; it binds Gaius Plautius, your colleague, who was given the office under the same auspices and with the same rights as yourself. Or did the people not make Plautius censor as one who had been elected with the fullest rights? Are you the sole exception in whose case this holds, as a unique and peculiar a.v.c. 12 lare valeat? Quem tu regem sacrificiorum crees?

⁴⁴⁴ Amplexus regni nomen, ut qui optimo iure rex Romae creatus sit, creatum se dicet. Quem semestri dictatura, quem interregno quinque dierum contentum fore putas? Quem clavi figendi aut ludorum 13 causa dictatorem audacter crees? Quam isti stolidos ac socordes videri creditis eos qui intra vicesimum
 diem ingentibus rebus gestis dictatura se abdicave-14 runt aut qui vitio creati abierunt magistratu! Quid ego antiqua repetam? Nuper intra decem¹ annos
 C. Maenius dictator, quia, cum quaestiones severius quam quibusdam potentibus tutum erat exerceret, contagio eius quod quaerebat ipse criminis obiectata
 ab inimicis est, ut privatus obviam iret criminis, 15 dictatura se abdicavit. Nolo ego istam in te modestiam: ne degeneraveris a familia imperiosissima et superbissima; non die, non hora citius quam necesse
 est magistratu abieris, modo ne excedas finitum 16 tempus. Satis est aut diem aut mensem censurae adicere? Triennium, inquit, et sex menses ultra quam licet Aemilia lege censuram geram et solus geram. Hoc quidem iam regno simile est.
 17 “An collegam subrogabis, quem ne in demortui
 18 quidem locum subrogari fas est? Paenitet enim, quod antiquissimum sollempne et solum ab ipso cui

¹ decem Ω¹: quinque Klockius Iac. Gronovius (chap. xxvi.
§ 7).

• ¹ II. ii. 1-2

² Livy has himself put the dictatorship of Maenius in the year 314. He is probably following another annalist here whose account (like that of the Fusti Capitolini) assigned it to 320.

privilege? Whom, pray, could men elect as king B.C. 310 for sacrifice?¹ He will seize on the title of sovereignty, and assert that he has been chosen as one elected with fullest rights to be king at Rome. Who, think you, will be content with six months as dictator; who with five days as interrex? Whom would you be so rash as to make dictator for the purpose of driving the nail or celebrating games? How dull and lumpish must those men seem to Appius, who after accomplishing great feats resigned the post of dictator within twenty days, or laid down the reins of office because of a flaw in their election! Why should I cite antiquity? Recently, within these ten years,² Gaius Maenius the dictator, for conducting an inquisition with more severity than was safe for certain great men, was accused by his ill-wishers of being tainted with that very felony which he was searching out, and abdicated the dictatorship, that he might face the charge as a private citizen. Far be it from me to require such self-denial of you! Fall not away from the most imperious and proud of families; quit not your magistracy one day, one hour, sooner than you must; only see that you overstep not the appointed limit. Is it enough to add a day, or a month, to his censorship? 'Three years,' quoth he, 'and six months beyond the time permitted by the Aemilian law will I administer the censorship, and administer it alone.' Surely this begins to look like monarchy!

"Or will you substitute a colleague for the other, though even in a dead man's place such substitution is forbidden by religion? You are not satisfied forsooth with having in your scrupulous exercise of a censor's powers diverted the service of our most

A.U.C.
444

fit institutum deo ab nobilissimis antistitibus eius 19 sacri ad servorum ministerium religiosus censor deduxisti, gens antiquior originibus urbis huius, hospitio deorum immortalium sancta, propter te ac
 tuam censuram intra annum ab stirpe extincta est,
 nisi universam rem publicam eo nefario obstrinxeris 20 quod ominari etiam reformidat animus. Urbs eo lustro capta est quo demortuo collega C. Iulio¹ L.
 Papirius Cursor, ne abiret magistratu, M. Cornelium 21 Maluginensem collegam subrogavit. Et quanto modestior illius cupiditas fuit quam tua, Appi! Nec solus nec ultra finitum lege tempus L. Papirius censuram gessit; tamen neminem invenit qui se postea auctorem sequeretur; omnes deinceps cen-sores post mortem collegae se magistratu abdicarunt.
 22 Te nec quod dies exiit² censurae nec quod collega
 magistratu abiit nec lex nec pudor coeret: virtutem
 in superbia, in audacia, in contemptu deorum hominumque ponis.
 23 "Ego te, Appi Claudi, pro istius magistratus maiestate ac verecundia quem gessisti non modo manu
 violatum sed ne verbo quidem inclemteriori a me 24 appellatum vellem; sed et haec quae adhuc egi
 pervicacia tua et superbia coegit me loqui, et nisi 25 Aemiliae legi parueris, in vincula duci iubebo, nec cum ita comparatum a maioribus sit ut comitiis

¹ C. Iulio Walters and Conway: C. Iulio censore Ω.

² exiit, s: exit Ω.

¹ The guilt of unlawfully prolonging his censorship.

ancient cult, the only one inaugurated by the god ^{B.C. 310} himself in whose honour it is observed, from the priesthood of the most exalted nobles to the ministry of slaves ; it was not enough that a family more ancient than the beginnings of this City, and sanctified by the entertainment of the immortal gods, should through you and your censorship be within a year uprooted and destroyed ; no, you must needs involve the entire state in such heinous guilt¹ as even to name is an omen that fills my mind with dread. The city was captured in that lustrum when, on the death of his colleague Gaius Julius, Lucius Papirius Cursor, to avoid having to vacate his office, caused Marcus Cornelius Maluginensis to be substituted in the room of the dead man. And how much more moderate, Appius, was his ambition than yours ! The censorship of Lucius Papirius was neither a sole one nor one prolonged beyond the legally established term ; yet he found none to follow his example ; all succeeding censors have abdicated on the death of a colleague. But you neither the expiration of your time restrains nor the fact that your colleague has resigned, nor the law, nor a sense of decency : you reckon worth in terms of pride, of recklessness, of contempt for gods and men.

" For my own part, Appius Claudius, when I think of the dignity of that office you have held and the reverence attaching to it, I could wish that I might spare you not only personal violence but even an ungentle word ; but your stubbornness and pride have compelled me to say what I have so far said, and unless you obey the Aemilian law, I shall order you to prison ; nor, seeing that our forefathers have ordained that in the election of censors, if either fall censoriis, nisi duo confecerint legitima suffragia, non renuntiato altero comitia differantur, ego te, qui solus censor creari non possis, solum censuram gerere nunc¹ patiar."

26 Haec taliaque cum dixisset, preendi censorem et in vincula duei iussit. Approbantibus sex tribunis actionem collegae tres appellanti Appio auxilio fuerunt; summaque invidia omnium ordinum solus censuram gessit.

XXXV. Dum ea Romae geruntur, iam Sutrium ab Etruscis obsidebatur consulique Fabio imis montibus ducenti ad ferendam opem sociis temptandasque munitiones, si qua posset, acies hostium instructa occurrit; quorum ingentem multitudinem cum ostenderet subiecta late planities, consul, ut loco paucitatem suorum adiuvaret, flectit paululum in clivos agmen—aspreta erant strata saxis—inde signa 3 in hostem obvertit. Etrusci omnium praeterquam multitudinis suae, qua sola freti erant, immemores proelium ineunt adeo raptim et avide ut abiectis missilibus, quo celerius manus consererent, stringerent 4 gladios vadentes in hostem; Romanus contra nunc tela, nunc saxa, quibus eos adfatum locus ipse 5 armabat, ingerere. Igitur scuta galeaeque ictae cum etiam quos non volneraverant turbarent neque short of the legal vote,¹ the election shall be put off B.C. 310 and the other not be declared elected, will I now suffer you, who cannot be elected as sole censor, to administer the censorship alone."

¹ gerere nunc ζ : gerere non Ω : gerere ζ .

¹ No one was held to be elected unless he had received the votes of an absolute majority of the centuries.

Having uttered these and similar remonstrances, he ordered the censor to be arrested and carried off to prison. Six tribunes approved the action of their colleague: three protected Appius on his appeal, and, greatly to the indignation of all classes, he continued as sole censor.

XXXV. During the progress of this affair in Rome, the Etruscans were already laying siege to Sutrium; and the consul Fabius, leading his army along the foot of the mountains to relieve the allies, and, if in any way practicable, to attack the works of the besiegers, encountered the enemy drawn up in line of battle. The plain spreading out below him revealed to the consul their exceeding strength; and in order to make up for his own deficiency in numbers by the advantage of position, he altered slightly his line of march, so as to mount the hills—which were rough and covered with stones—and there turned and faced the enemy. The Etruscans, forgetting everything but their numbers, in which alone they trusted, entered the combat with such haste and eagerness that they cast away their missiles in order to come the sooner to close quarters, and drawing their swords rushed at the enemy. The Romans, on the contrary, fell to pelting them, now with javelins and now with stones, of which latter the ground itself provided a good supply; and even such of the Etruscans as were not wounded were confused by the blows that rattled down on their helms and shields. It was no easy matter to get close enough

A.U.C.
444

subire erat facile ad propiorem pugnam neque mis-6 silia habebant, quibus eminus rem gererent—stantes et expositos ad ictus cum iam satis nihil tegeret, quosdam etiam pedem referentes fluctuantemque et instabilem aciem redintegrato clamore strictis gladiis 7 hastati et principes invadunt. Eum impetum non tulerunt Etrusci versisque signis fuga effusa castra repetunt. Sed equites Romani praevecti per obliqua campi cum se fugientibus obtulissent, omisso ad 8 castra itinere montes petunt; inde inermi paene agmine ac vexato volneribus in silvam Ciminiam penetratum. Romanus multis milibus Etruscorum caesis, duodequadraginta signis militaribus captis,
 castris etiam hostium cum praeda ingenti potitur.
 Tum de persequendo hoste agitari coeptum.

XXXVI. Silva erat Ciminia magis tum invia atque horrenda quam nuper fuere Germanici saltus, nulli ad eam¹ diem ne mercatorum quidem adita. Eam intrare haud fere quisquam praeter ducem ipsum
 audebat; aliis omnibus cladis Caudinae nondum 2 memoria aboleverat. Tum ex iis² qui aderant, consulis frater M. Fabius³—Caesonem alii, C.
 Claudium quidam, matre eadem qua consulem genitum, tradunt—speculatum se iturum professus bre-3 vique omnia certa allaturum. Caere educatus apud hospites, Etruscis inde litteris eruditus erat lin-

¹ eam A ζ : ea Ω.

² iis ζ : hiis A : his Ω.

³ frater M. Fabius—Weissenborn : fratrem m. fabium Ω.

¹ Livy is probably thinking of the German campaigns of Caesar in 55 and 53, and of Agrippa in 38 B.C.

for fighting hand to hand, and they had no javelins B.C. 310 for long-range work. There they stood, exposed to missiles, with no adequate cover of any sort, and as some of them gave ground and the line began to waver and be unsteady, the Roman first and second lines, giving a fresh cheer, charged them, sword in hand. Their onset was too much for the Etruscans, who faced about and fled headlong towards their camp. But the Roman cavalry, riding obliquely across the plain, presented themselves in front of the fugitives, who then abandoned the attempt to reach their camp and sought the mountains; from which they made their way in a body, unarmed and suffering from their wounds, to the Ciminian Forest. The Romans, having slain many thousand Etruscans and captured eight-and-thirty standards, took possession also of the enemy's camp, with a very large booty. They then began to consider the feasibility of a pursuit.

XXXVI. In those days the Ciminian Forest was more impassable and appalling than were lately the wooded defiles of Germany,¹ and no one—not even a trader—had up to that time visited it. To enter it was a thing that hardly anyone but the general himself was bold enough to do: with all the rest the recollection of the Caudine Forks was still too vivid. Then one of those present, the consul's brother Marcus Fabius,—some say that it was Caeso Fabius, others Gaius Claudius, a son of the same mother as the consul—offered to explore and return in a short time with definite information about everything. He had been educated at Caere in the house of family friends, and from this circumstance was learned in Etruscan writings and knew the Etruscan

A.U.C.
444

quamque Etruseam probe noverat. Habeo auctores volgo tum Romanos pueros, sicut nunc Graecis, ita 4 Etruseis litteris erudiri solitos; sed proprius est vero praecipuum aliquid fuisse in eo qui se tam audaci simulatione hostibus immiscuerit. Servus ei dieitur comes unus fuisse, nutritus una eoque haud ignarus 5 linguae eiusdem; nec quicquam aliud proficiscentes quam summatim regionis quae intranda erat naturam
 ac nomina principum in populis accepere, ne qua
 inter conloquia insigni nota haesitantes deprendi 6 possent. Iere pastorali habitu, agrestibus telis, falcibus gaesisque¹ binis, armati. Sed neque com-mercium linguae nec vestis armorumve habitus sic
 eos texit quod abhorrebat ab fide quemquam
 7 externum Ciminios saltus intraturum. Usque ad Camertes Umbros penetrasse dicuntur. Ibi qui essent fateri Romanum ausum; introductumque in senatum consulis verbis egisse de societate amici-
 8 tiaque atque inde comi hospitio acceptum nuntiare Romanis iussum commeatum exercitui dierum tri-ginta praesto fore, si ea loca intrasset, iuventutemque Camertium Umbrorum in armis paratam imperio futuram.

9 Haec cum relata consuli essent, impedimentis
 prima vigilia praemissis, legionibus post impedi-

¹ gaesisque A⁵ ; caesisq. (gessis D² or D¹ in marg.) 2.

language well. I have authority for believing that in that age Roman boys were regularly wont to be schooled in Etruscan literature, as nowadays they are trained in Greek ; but it seems more probable that this man possessed some exceptional qualification to induce him to venture amongst enemies in so daring a disguise. It is said that his only companion was a slave, brought up with him, and hence acquainted, like his master, with the language. They set out, after acquiring no more than a summary knowledge of the nature of the region they must enter and the names of the chief men in those tribes, to save them from being detected in conversation by boggling at any well-known fact. They went dressed as shepherds and armed with rustic weapons, namely billhooks and a brace of javelins apiece. But neither their familiarity with the tongue nor the fashion of their dress and weapons was so great a protection to them as the fact that it was repugnant to belief that any stranger would enter the Ciminian defiles. They are said to have penetrated as far as Camerinum in Umbria, where the Roman, having ventured to tell who they were, was introduced into the senate, and treated with them in the consul's name for friendship and an alliance. Having then been hospitably entertained, he was bidden to carry word back to the Romans that thirty days' provisions for their army would be waiting for them, if they came into that region, and that the young men of the Umbrian Camertes would be armed and ready to obey their orders.

On their success being made known to the consul, he sent the baggage ahead, in the first watch, and directed the legions to follow the baggage. He

A.U.C. 10 menta ire iussis ipse substituit cum equitatu et luce ⁴⁴⁴ orta postero die obequitavit stationibus hostium, quae extra saltum dispositae erant; et cum satis
 diu tenuisset hostem, in castra sese recepit portaque
 altera egressus ante noctem agmen adsequitur.
 11 Postero die luce prima iuga Ciminii montis tenebat;
 inde contemplatus opulenta Etruriae arva milites 12 emittit. Ingenti iam abacta praeda tumultuariae agrestium Etruscorum cohortes repente a principibus regionis eius concitatae Romanis occurrunt, adeo
 incompositae ut vindices praedarum prope ipsi 13 praedae fuerint. Caesis fugatisque his, late depopulato agro victor Romanus opulentusque rerum 14 omnium copia in castra rediit. Eo forte quinque legati cum duobus tribunis plebis venerant denuntiatum Fabio senatus verbis ne saltum Ciminium transiret. Laetati serius se quam ut impedire bellum possent venisse, nuntii victoriae Romam revertuntur.

XXXVII. Hac expeditione consulis motum latius erat quam profligatum bellum; vastationem namque
 sub Ciminii montis radicibus iacens ora senserat, conciveratque indignatione non Etruriae modo popu-2 los sed Umbriae finitima. Itaque quantus non unquam antea exercitus ad Sutrium venit; neque
 e silvis tantummodo promota castra sed etiam avi-

¹ The tribunes were added to the embassy that they might, if necessary, compel obedience to the senate by the exercise of their sacrosanct authority. This was an unusual procedure, as the powers of the tribunes were held to extend no further than one mile from the City.

himself stopped behind with the cavalry, and at ^{B.C. 310} dawn of the following day made a demonstration against the enemy's outposts, which had been stationed at the entrance to the pass. Having kept the enemy in play for a sufficient time, he retired within his camp, and emerging from it by the opposite gate overtook the column before night. Next day, with the first rays of light, he was on the crest of the Ciminian mountain and, looking thence over the rich ploughlands of Etruria, sent his soldiers to plunder. The Romans had already brought away out enormous booty when certain improvised bands of Etruscan peasants, called together in hot haste by the chief men of that country, encountered them, but with so little discipline that in seeking to regain the spoils they had nearly been made a spoil themselves. Having slain or driven off these men and wasted the country far and wide, the Romans returned to their camp, victorious and enriched with all manner of supplies. There, as it happened, they found five legates, with two tribunes of the plebs,¹ who had come to order Fabius in the name of the senate not to cross the Ciminian Forest. Rejoicing that they had come too late to be able to hinder the campaign, they returned to Rome with tidings of victory.

XXXVII. This expedition of the consul's, instead of putting an end to the war, only gave it a wider range. For the district lying about the base of Mount Ciminius had felt the devastation, and had aroused not only Etruria to resentment but the neighbouring parts of Umbria also. So an army came to Sutrium that was larger than any they had raised before; and not only did they move forward their camp, out of the woods, but even, in their

A.U.C.
444

ditate dimicandi quam primum in campos delata
 3 acies. Deinde instructa primo suo stare loco, relichto hostibus¹ ad instruendum contra spatio; dein, postquam detractare² hostem sensere pugnam, ad vallum 4 subeunt. Ubi postquam stationes quoque receptas intra munimenta sensere, clamor repente circa duces ortus, ut eo sibi e castris cibaria eius diei deferri
 iuberent: mansuros se sub armis et aut nocte aut
 5 certe luce prima castra hostium invasuros. Nihilo quietior Romanus exercitus imperio ducis continetur.
 Decima erat fere diei hora, cum cibum capere consul milites iubet; praecipit ut in armis sint quacumque 6 diei noctisve hora signum dederit; paucis milites adloquitur, Samnitium bella extollit, elevat Etruscos;
 nec hostem hosti nec multitudinem multitudini com-
 parandam ait; esse praeterea telum aliud occultum; 7 scituros in tempore; interea taceri opus esse. His ambagibus prodi simulabat hostes, quo animus militum multitudine territus restitueretur; et, quod sine munimento consederant,³ veri similius erat quod simulabatur.

Curati cibo corpora quieti dant et quarta fere
 8 vigilia sine tumultu excitati arma capiunt. Dolabrae calonibus dividuntur ad vallum proruendum fos-

¹ hostibus ζ : hostio O : hostium Ω : hosti Madvig.

² detractare A^2 : detractare . . . pugnam omitted by M: detrec (-traec- or -trac- P) tare Ω .

³ consederant ζ : considerant Ω : constiterant ζ .

¹ Perhaps about six o'clock.

eagerness for combat, came down into the plain at ^{B.C. 310} the earliest opportunity in battle formation. At first, after forming up, they stood still in their positions, having left their enemies room to draw up opposite. Then, finding the Romans in no haste to engage them, they advanced up to the rampart. When they saw that even the outguards had retired within the works, they began shouting to their generals, to have their rations for the day sent out to them from the camp; they would wait under arms, they said, and either that night, or at daybreak at the latest, attack the enemy's stockade. The Roman army was every whit as restless, but was restrained by the general's authority. It was about the tenth hour of the day¹ when the consul bade the soldiers sup, and commanded them to be armed and ready at whatever hour of the day or night he might give the signal. In a brief address he magnified the Samnite wars and belittled the Etruscans: there was no comparison, he said, between the two enemies, or between their numbers; moreover, he had an additional weapon in concealment: they should know about it when the time came; until then it must remain a secret. By these obscure hints he sought to engender a belief that the enemy were being betrayed, in order to revive the spirits of his men, which were damped by the numbers of their enemies; and the fact that the Etruscans had thrown up no breastworks where they lay lent colour to the insinuation.

Refreshed with food, the soldiers gave themselves up to sleep, and at about the fourth watch were awakened without noise and put on their armour. Mattocks were issued to the soldiers' servants, that they might sasque implendas. Intra munimenta instruitur acies, delectae cohortes ad portarum exitus conlocantur.

9 Dato deinde signo paulo ante lucem, quod aestivis
 noctibus sopitae maxime quietis tempus est, proruto vallo erupit acies, stratos passim invadit hostes; alios immobiles, alios semisomnos in cubilibus suis, maxi-mam partem ad arma trepidantes caedes oppressit;

10 paucis armandi se datum spatum est; eos ipsos
 non signum certum, non ducem sequentes fundit Romanus fugatosque persequitur. Ad castra, ad silvas diversi tendebant. Silvae tutius dedere refu-gium; nam castra in campus sita eodem die capiuntur. Aurum argentumque iussum referri ad con-sulem; cetera praeda militis fuit. Caesa aut capta eo die hostium milia ad sexaginta.

11 Eam tam claram pugnam trans Ciminiam silvam
 ad Perusiam pugnatam quidam auctores sunt metuque
 in magno civitatem fuisse ne interclusus exercitus
 tam infesto saltu coortis undique Tuscis Vmbrisque

12 opprimeretur.¹ Sed ubicumque pugnatum est, res Romana superior fuit. Itaque a Perusia et Cortona² et Arretio, quae ferme capita Etruriae populorum ea tempestate erant, legati pacem foedusque ab Romanis petentes indutias in triginta annos impetraverunt.

XXXVIII. Dum haec in Etruria geruntur, consul alter C. Marcius Rutulus³ Allifas de Samnitibus vi

¹ opprimeretur A² ꝝ: opprimerentur ꝝ: opprimentur M.

² Cortona A² (marg., A⁵ ꝝ: cortone (?) A¹): crotone ꝝ.

³ Rutulus Conway: rutulius or rutilius ꝝ.

level the rampart and fill up the trenches. The line B.C. 310 was drawn up inside the fortifications, and selected cohorts were posted at the exits. Then, on the signal being given a little before dawn, which on summer nights is the time of deepest sleep, the rampart was thrown down, and the Romans, rushing out in battle-formation, fell upon their enemies, who were lying all about the field. Some were slain without even stirring in their sleep, some were but half awake, the greatest number were reaching in terror for their weapons. Only a few were given time to arm themselves; and even these, with no definite standard to follow and no leader, the Romans routed and chased from the field. Some made for the camp and others for the mountains, as they fled this way and that. The forests afforded the surer refuge; for the camp, being situated in the plain, was captured the same day. Orders were issued that all gold and silver be brought to the consul;
 the rest of the booty went to the soldiers. On that day the enemy lost sixty thousand slain or captured.

Some historians relate that this famous battle was fought on the other side of the Ciminian Forest, near Perusia, and that Rome was in a panic lest the army should be surrounded and cut off in that dangerous defile by the Tuscans and Umbrians rising up on every hand. But, wherever it was fought, the Romans were the victors. And so from Perusia and Cortona and Arretium, which at that time might be the chief cities of the nations of Etruria, ambassadors came to Rome to sue for peace and an alliance. They obtained a truce for thirty years.

XXXVIII. While these things were going on in Etruria, the other consul, Gaius Marcius Rutulus, cepit. Multa alia castella vicique aut deleta hostiliter aut integra in potestatem venere.

2 Per idem tempus et classis Romana a P. Cornelio, quem senatus maritimae orae praefecerat, in Cam-paniam acta cum adpulsa Pompeios esset, socii inde navales ad depopulandum agrum Nucerium profecti, proximis raptim vastatis unde redditus tutus ad
naves esset, dulcedine, ut fit, praedae longius pro-3 gressi excivere hostes. Palatis per agros nemo obvius fuit, cum occidione occidi possent; redeuntes agmine incauto haud procul navibus adsecuti agrestes exuerunt praeda, partem etiam occiderunt; quae superfuit caedi trepida multitudo ad naves compulsa est.

4 Profectio Q. Fabi trans Ciminiam silvam quantum Romae terrorem fecerat, tam laetam famam in Samnium ad hostes tulerat interclusum Romanum exercitum obsideri, cladisque imaginem Furculas
5 Caudinas memorabant: eadem temeritate avidam ulteriorum semper gentem in saltus invios deductam, saeptam non hostium magis armis quam locorum
6 iniquitatibus esse. Iam gaudium invidia quadam miscebatur, quod belli Romani decus ab Samnitibus

¹ At VIII. xxv. 4, Livy mentioned the acquisition of Allifae, but has nowhere spoken of its recapture by the Samnites.

² Diod. (XIX. lxv.) tells us that Nuceria (formerly an ally of Rome) had revolted to the Samnites.

captured Allifae from the Samnites by assault.¹ Many forts and villages besides were either wiped out in the course of hostilities or came intact into the hands of the Romans.

At about this time a Roman fleet, commanded by Publius Cornelius, whom the senate had placed in charge of the coast, sailed for Campania and put into Pompeii. From there the sailors and rowers set out to pillage the territory of Nuceria.² Having quickly ravaged the nearest fields, from which they might have returned in safety to their ships, they were lured on, as often happens, by the love of booty, and going too far abroad aroused the enemy. While they roamed through the fields, nobody interfered with them, though they might have been utterly annihilated ; but as they came trooping back, without a thought of danger, the country-folk overtook them not far from the ships, stripped them of their plunder, and even slew a part of them ; those who escaped the massacre were driven, a disordered rabble, to their ships.

Great as had been the fears excited in Rome when Quintus Fabius marched through the Ciminian Forest, the rejoicings that took place in Samnium amongst the enemy were no less on their hearing a report that the Roman army was intercepted and besieged. They recalled the Caudine Forks as showing what the disaster would be like ; with the same temerity, they said, a race that was ever reaching out for what lay beyond had been led into pathless forests and there hemmed in, more by the difficulties of the ground than by the arms of their enemy. Soon their joy began to be mixed with a kind of envy, that Fortune should have transferred the glory

- A.U.C. 444
- 7 fortuna ad Etruscos avertisset. Itaque armis virisque ad opprimendum¹ C. Marcium consulem concurrunt, protinus inde Etruriam per Marsos ac Sabinos petituri, si Marcius dimicandi potestatem non faciat.
- 8 Obvius iis consul fuit. Dimicatum proelio utrumque atroci atque incerto eventu est, et cum anceps caedes fuisset, adversae tamen rei fama in Romanos vertit ob amissos quosdam equestris ordinis tribunosque militum atque unum legatum, et quod insigne maxime fuit, consulis ipsius volnus.
- 9 Ob haec etiam aucta fama, ut solet, ingens terror patres invasit dictatoremque dici placebat; nec quin Cursor Papirius diceretur in quo tum summa rei bellicae ponebatur, dubium cuiquam erat. Sed nec 10 in Samnium nuntium perferri omnibus infestis tuto posse nec vivere Marcium consulem satis fidebant. Alter consul Fabius infestus privatim Papirio erat;
- 11 quae ne ira obstaret bono publico, legatos ex consularium numero mittendos ad eum senatus censuit,
- 12 qui sua quoque eum, non publica solum auctoritate moverent ut memoriam simultatium patriae remitteret. Profecti legati ad Fabium cum senatus consultum tradidissent adiecissentque orationem convenientem mandatis, consul demissis in terram oculis tacitus ab incertis quidnam acturus esset legatis of the Roman war from Samnites to Etruscans. So ^{B.C. 310} they hastened to bring all their strength to bear upon crushing Gaius Marcius, the consul; and resolved, if Marcius should avoid an encounter, to march forthwith into Etruria, through the countries of the Marsi and the Sabines. The consul met them, and the battle was fiercely contested on both sides, but without a decision being reached. Yet, doubtful though it was which side had suffered most, the report gained ground that the Romans had been worsted: they had lost certain members of the equestrian order, certain military tribunes, and one lieutenant, and—most conspicuous of their misfortunes—the consul himself was wounded.

¹ opprimendum σ : optinendum (or ob-) Ω.

These reverses as usual were further exaggerated in the telling, and the senate in great dismay determined on the appointment of a dictator. Nobody could doubt that Papirius Cursor, who was regarded as the foremost soldier of his time, would be designated. But the senators were not certain that a messenger could be got through in safety to Samnium, where all was hostile, nor that the consul Marcius was alive. The other consul, Fabius, had a private grudge against Papirius; and lest this enmity might hinder the general welfare, the senate decided to send a deputation of former consuls, in the hope that their personal influence, when added to the wishes of the government, might induce him to forget those quarrels for the good of the country. The ambassadors went to Fabius and delivered the resolution of the senate, with a discourse that suited their instructions. The consul, his eyes fixed on the ground, retired without a word, leaving the ambassadors uncertain what he proposed to do. Then in the

A.U.C. 14 recessit; nocte deinde silentio, ut mos est, L. Papirium dictatorem dixit.⁴⁴⁴ Cui cum ob animum egregie victum legati gratias agerent, obstinatum silentium obtinuit ac sine responso ac mentione facti sui legatos dimisit, ut appareret insignem dolorem ingenti compriani animo.

15 Papirius C. Iunium Bubuleum magistrum equitum dixit; atque ei legem curiatam de imperio ferenti triste omen diem diffidit, quod Faucia curia fuit principium, duabus insignis cladibus, captae urbis et Caudinae pacis, quod utroque anno eiusdem curiae 16 fuerat principium. Macer Licinius tertia etiam clade, quae ad Cremeram accepta est, abominandam eam curiam facit.

XXXIX. Dictator postero die auspiciis repetitis pertulit legem; et profectus cum legionibus ad terrorem traducti silvam Ciminiam exercitus nuper 2 scriptis ad Longulam pervenit acceptisque a Marcio consule veteribus militibus in aciem copias eduxit. Nec hostes detractare visi pugnam. Instructos deinde armatosque, cum ab neutrīs proelium in- 3 ciperet, nox oppressit. Quieti aliquamdiu nec suis

¹ The consul rose and took the auspices after midnight because it was less likely that anything unlucky would then be said or done—in the absence of bystanders—to vitiate the ceremony.

² Under the kings the curiate assembly had been the only formal assembly of the people (cf. I. xiii. 6 for the origin of the curiae), but in the time of the republic its functions had largely passed to the centuriate assembly. It was, however, still called upon to ratify the election of new magistrates by passing a lex curiata de imperio, and retained certain other ceremonial duties.

³ This was determined each time by lot.

⁴ 477 B.C. (Book II, chap. 1.).

silence of the night, as the custom is, he appointed ^{B.C. 310} Lucius Papirius dictator.¹ When the envoys thanked him for nobly conquering his feelings, he continued obstinately silent, and dismissed them without making any reply or alluding to what he had done, so that it was clearly seen what agony his great heart was suppressing.

Papirius named Gaius Junius Bubulcus master of the horse. When he began to lay before the curiate assembly² a law confirming his authority, the proceedings were cut short by an evil omen, the first vote to be counted being that of the ward called Faucia, notorious for two calamities, the capture of the City and the Caudine Peace, which had both been incurred in years when this same curia had the right of the first return.³ Licinius Macer makes this ward unlucky also for a third disaster—that of the Cremera.⁴

XXXIX. Next day the dictator sought the auspices afresh and carried the law through. Then, setting out with the legions which had recently been recruited on account of the fear occasioned by the army's march through the Ciminian Forest, he came to the vicinity of Longula,⁵ and taking over from Marcius the consul his veteran troops, marched out and offered battle, which the enemy on their part seemed willing to accept. But while the two armies stood armed and ready for the conflict, which neither cared to begin, night overtook them. For some time after that they remained quietly in the camps

⁵ Longula was a Volscian town, but was situated not far from the Samnite border. It is not necessary to assume, with Weissenborn-Mueller, that Livy is referring to an otherwise unknown Longula in Samnium.

A.U.C.

444

diffidentes viribus nec hostem spernentes, stativa in 5 propinquo habuere.¹ Interea Etrusci² lege sacrata
 coacto exercitu, cum vir virum legisset, quantis
 nunquam alias ante simul copiis simul animis dimi-6 carunt; tantoque irarum certamine gesta res est ut ab neutra parte emissa sint tela. Gladiis pugna coepit et acerrime commissa ipso certamine, quod aliquamdiu anceps fuit, accensa est, ut non cum Etruscis totiens viciis, sed cum aliqua nova gente 7 videretur dimicatio esse. Nihil ab ulla parte move-tur fugae; cadunt antesignani, et ne nudentur
 propugnatoribus signa, fit ex secunda prima acies.
 8 Ab ultimis deinde subsidiis cietur miles; adeoque ad
 ultimum laboris ac periculi ventum est ut equites Romani omissis equis ad primos ordines peditum per arma, per corpora evaserint. Ea velut nova inter fes-9 sos exorta acies turbavit signa Etruscorum; secuta
 deinde impetum eorum, uteumque affecta erat, cetera
 10 multitudo tandem perrumpit ordines hostium. Tunc vinci pertinacia copta et averti manipuli quidam, et,
 ut semel dedere hi terga,³ etiam ceteri item⁴ capes-

¹ habuere Anderson (ed. of Bk. IX. p. 259): habuere. Nam et cum umbrorum exercitu acie depugnatum est; fusi tamen magis quam caesi hostes, quia coeptam acriter non tolerarunt pugnam: et ad Vadimonis lacum POTDLA: M has these words and also (before Nam) the words et rurae (?): A⁴ the words interea res in etruria geste: P² (or I³) F? (marg.) U have them after pugnam (U adding et after res): F³ has after pugnam (over erasure) interim ab fabio cōs in etruria res feliciter geste ad vadimonis lacum. Anderson supposes that we have here what was written as a comment on the first sentence of § 11.

² Interea Etrusci Walters (note): Et Etrusci Anderson: Etrusci Ω.

³ dedere hi terga Walters and Conway: dedere terga Ω: dederunterga Ο: dederet terga TD?: dederet et terga L?: dederet (or dederat or dedeīt) terga D.

they had established near one another, neither lacking ^{B.C. 310} confidence in themselves nor yet making light of their adversaries. Meanwhile the Etruscans, employing a lex sacrata,¹ had raised an army in which each man had chosen his comrade, and joined battle, with greater forces, and at the same time with greater valour, than ever before. The field was contested with such rivalry of rage that neither side discharged a missile. The battle began with swords, and, furious at the outset, waxed hotter as the struggle continued, for the victory was long undecided. It seemed as though the Romans were contending, not with the so oft defeated Etruscans, but with some new race. No sign of flight was visible in any quarter. As the front-rankers fell, the second line moved up to replace the first, that the standards might not want defenders. After that the last reserves were called upon; and to such extremity of distress and danger did the Romans come that their cavalry dismounted, and made their way over arms and over bodies to the front ranks of the infantry. Like a fresh line springing up amongst the exhausted combatants, they wrought havoc in the companies of the Etruscans. Then the rest of the soldiers, following up their charge, despite of weariness, at last broke through the enemy's ranks. At this their stubbornness began to be overcome, and certain companies to face about; and when these had once turned tail, the rest likewise took to flight. That

¹ One who violated the lex sacrata was forfeited to the gods. See chap. xl. § 9, iv. xxvi. 3, xxxvi. xxxviii. 1, and especially x. xxxviii. 3 ff.

⁴ ceteri item Harant: certiores Ω: tutiores A: certiores
*A*² Koch: ceteri certiores Walters and Conway.

A.U.C. 11 sere fugam. Ille primum dies fortuna vetere abundantes Etruscorum fregit opes. Caesum in acie, quod roboris fuit; castra eodem impetu capta direptaque.

A.U.C. 444
446 XL. Pari subinde periculo gloriaeque eventu bellum in Samnitibus erat, qui praeter ceteros belli apparatus, ut acies sua fulgeret novis armorum 2 insignibus fecerunt. Duo exercitus erant; scuta alterius auro, alterius argento caelaverunt; forma erat scuti: summum latius, qua pectus atque umeri teguntur, fastigio aequali; ad imum cuneatior mobili 3 litatis causa. Spongia pectori tegumentum et sinistrum crus ocrea tectum; galeae cristatae, quae speciem magnitudini corporum adderent. Tunicae auratis militibus versicolores, argentatis lintaeae candidae. His vaginae argenteae, baltea argentea: auratae vaginae, aurea baltea illis erant, et equorum inaurata tapeta.¹ His dextrum cornu datum; illi in 4 sinistro consistunt. Notus iam Romanis apparatus insignium armorum fuerat doctique a ducibus erant horridum militem esse debere, non caelatum auro et 5 argento sed ferro et animis fretum: quippe illa praedam verius quam arma esse, nitentia ante rem, 6 deformia inter sanguinem et volnera. Virtutem

¹ The words his vaginae—tapeta are not found in the MSS. of Livy. Nonius (194, 20) cites (as from Liv. IX) auratae vaginae, aurata baltea illis erant, and Auctor explan. in Denatum, and Probus (cf. Keil, Gram, Lat. IV 542 and 129) ascribe to Livy ("Livy or Virgil," Probus) erant et equorum inaurata tapeta. Walters and Conway suggest placing them as in the text, prefixing his vaginae argenteae, baltea argentea which they conjecture to have stood in the original (Class. Quart. 12 1918) p. 103).

¹ Weissenborn-Mueller think a breastplate resembling a sponge in appearance is intended. The translator follows

day for the first time broke the might of the Etruscans, which had long flourished in prosperity. Their strength was cut off in the battle, and their camp was taken and plundered in the same attack.

XL. The war in Samnium, immediately afterwards, was attended with equal danger and an equally glorious conclusion. The enemy, besides their other warlike preparations, had made their battle-line to glitter with new and splendid arms. There were two corps: the shields of the one were inlaid with gold, of the other with silver. The shape of the shield was this: the upper part, where it protected the breast and shoulders, was rather broad, with a level top; below it was somewhat tapering, to make it easier to handle. They wore a sponge¹ to protect the breast, and the left leg was covered with a greave. Their helmets were crested, to make their stature appear greater. The tunics of the gilded warriors were parti-coloured; those of the silver ones were linen of a dazzling white. The latter had silver sheaths and silver baldries: the former gilded sheaths and golden baldries, and their horses had gold-embroidered saddle-cloths. The right wing was assigned to these: the others took up their post on the left. The Romans had already learned of these splendid accoutrements, and their generals had taught them that a soldier should be rough to look on, not adorned with gold and silver but putting his trust in iron and in courage: indeed those other things were more truly spoil than arms, shining bright before a battle, but losing their beauty in the midst of blood and wounds; manhood they said, Professor Anderson in taking the expression literally, of a corslet made of sponge.

esse militis decus et omnia illa victoriam sequi et ditem hostem quamvis pauperis victoris praemium
esse.

7 His Cursor vocibus instinctos milites in proelium ducit. Dextro ipse cornu consistit, sinistro praefecit
8 magistrum equitum. Simul est concursum, ingens fuit cum hoste certamen, non segnius inter dictatorem et magistrum equitum ab utra parte victoria
9 inciperet. Prior forte Iunius commovit hostem, laevo dextrum cornu, sacratos more Samnitium milites eoque candida veste et paribus candore armis insignes; eos se Orcus mactare Iunius dictitans¹ cum intulisset signa turbavit ordines et haud dubie impulit aciem.
10 Quod ubi sensit dictator, "Ab laevone cornu victoria incipiet" inquit, "et dextrum cornu, dictatoris acies, alienam pugnam sequetur, non partem maximam 11 victoriae trahet?" Concitat milites; nec peditum virtuti equites aut legatorum studia ducibus cedunt.
12 M. Valerius a dextro, P. Decius ab laevo cornu, ambo consulares, ad equites in cornibus positos evehuntur adhortatique eos ut partem secum capesserent decoris in transversa latera hostium incurront.
13 Is novus additus terror cum ex parte utraque circumvasisset aciem et ad terrorem hostium legiones Romanae redintegrato clamore intulissent gradum,

¹ intulisset T² (or T¹) :- intulissent Ω.

¹ Orcus—the Greek Pluto—was god of the dead.

was the adornment of a soldier; all those other things went with the victory, and a rich enemy was the prize of the victor, however poor.

Whilst his men were animated by these words, Cursor led them into battle. He took up his own post on the right, and committed the left to the master of the horse. From the moment of encountering, there was a mighty struggle with the enemy, and a struggle no less sharp between the dictator and the master of the horse, to decide which wing was to inaugurate the victory. It so happened that Junius was the first to make an impression on the Samnites. With the Roman left he faced the enemy's right, where they had consecrated themselves, as their custom was, and for that reason were resplendent in white coats and equally white armour. Declaring that he offered up these men in sacrifice to Orcus,¹ Junius charged, threw their ranks into disorder, and clearly made their line recoil. When the dictator saw this, he cried, "Shall the victory begin upon the left? Shall the right, the dictator's division, follow the attack of others? Shall it not carry off the honours of the victory?" This fired the soldiers with new energy; nor did the cavalry display less valour than the foot, or the lieutenants less enthusiasm than the generals. Marcus Valerius on the right and Publius Decius on the left, both men of consular rank, rode out to the cavalry, which was posted on the wings, and, exhorting them to join with themselves in seizing a share of glory, charged obliquely against the enemy's flanks. Thus a new and appalling danger enveloped their line on either side, and when the Roman legions, observing the terror of the Samnites, pressed forward with

- A.U.C. 14 tum fuga ab Samnitibus coepta. Iam strage hominum 446 armorumque insignium campi repleri. Ac primo pavidos Samnites castra sua accepere, deinde ne ea
 quidem retenta; captis direptisque ante noctem iniectus ignis.
- 15 Dictator ex senatus consulto triumphavit, cuius
 triumpho longe maximam speciem captiva arma prebuere. Tantum magnificentiae visum in iis,¹ ut aurata scuta dominis argentiarum² ad forum ornamdum dividerentur. Inde natum initium dicitur fori 17 ornandi ab aedilibus cum tensae ducerentur. Et Romani quidem ad honorem deum insignibus armis
 hostium usi sunt: Campani ab superbia et odio Samnitium gladiatores, quod spectaculum inter epulas erat, eo ornatu armarunt Samnitiumque nomine compellarunt.
- 18 Eodem anno cum reliquiis³ Etruscorum ad Peru-siam, quae et ipsa indutiarum fidem ruperat, Fabius 19 consul nec dubia nec difficile victoria dimicat. Ipsum oppidum—nam ad moenia vitor accessit—cepisset, 20 ni legati dedentes urbem exissent. Praesidio Perusiae

¹ iis ζ : hiis A : his Ω .

² argentiarum Muretus: argentariorum (-oriorum) O Ω .

³ reliquiis F^3 ζ : reliquis Ω .

¹ It was forty years later when the Romans began to coin silver for themselves; but there would be much coined silver in circulation by this time from Etruria and Magna Graecia, to furnish employment for money-changers (argentarii).

² A tensa is figured in Stuart Jones, Companion to Roman History, Pl. xlix. It was used to carry the images of the Capitoline gods in solemn procession to the Circus, at the time of the ludi circenses.

³ The Romans seem to have obtained from Capua the idea of gladiators (Livy, Per. XVI.), and the "Samnite" redoubled shouts, the enemy began to flee. The fields were soon heaped with slain and with glittering armour. At first the frightened Samnites found a refuge in their camp, but presently even that had to be abandoned, and ere nightfall it had been taken, sacked, and set on fire.

The dictator, as decreed by the senate, celebrated a triumph, in which by far the finest show was afforded by the captured armour. So magnificent was its appearance that the shields inlaid with gold were divided up amongst the owners of the money-changers' booths, to be used in decking out the Forum.¹ From this is said to have come the custom of the aediles adorning the Forum whenever the tensae, or covered chariots of the gods, were conducted through it.² So the Romans made use of the splendid armour of their enemies to do honour to the gods; while the Campanians, in consequence of their pride and in hatred of the Samnites, equipped after this fashion the gladiators who furnished them entertainment at their feasts, and bestowed on them the name of Samnites.³

In the same year the consul Fabius fought a battle with the remnants of the Etruscan forces near Perusia—which, together with other cities, had broken the truce⁴—and gained an easy and decisive victory. He would have taken the town itself—for after the battle he marched up to the walls—had not ambassadors come out and surrendered the place. Having placed a garrison in Perusia and having sent was always one of the standard types. The sentence is usually taken as implying that the Capuans had been present as allies of the Romans in the battle.

⁴ Chap. xxxvii. § 12.

imposito, legationibus Etruriae amicitiam potentibus
 p̄ se Romam ad senatum missis consul praestantiore
 etiam quam dictator victoria triumphans urbem est 21 invectus; quin etiam devictorum Samnitium decus magna ex parte ad legatos, P. Decium et M. Valerium, est versum; quos populus proximis comitiis ingenti consensu consulem alterum, alterum praetorem de-claravit.

XLI. Fabio ob egregie perdomitam Etruriam continuatur consulatus; Decius collega datur. Valerius praetor quartum creatus. Consules partiti provincias:
 2 Etruria Decio, Samnium Fabio evenit. Is profectus¹
 3 ad Nuceriam Alfaternam, cum pacem petentes, quod
 uti ea cum daretur noluissent, aspernatus esset,² 4 oppugnando ad deditioem subegit. Cum Samnitibus acie dimicatum. Haud magno certamine hostes victi; neque eius pugnae memoria tradita foret, ni
 Marsi eo primum proelio cum Romanis bellassent.
 Secuti Marsorum defectionem Paeligni eandem fortunam habuerunt.

5 Decio quoque, alteri consuli, secunda belli fortuna erat. Tarquinensem metu subegerat frumentum exercitui praebere atque indutias in quadraginta 6 annos petere. Volsiniensium castella aliquot vi cepit; quaedam ex his diruit ne receptaculo hostibus
 essent; circumferendoque passim bello tantum ter-

¹ Is profectus Sigonius: proiectus Ω.

² esset A⁴ (or A⁵, marg. Madvig: ēā L: eā DA: est (or ē Ω: wanting in O.

¹ The Marsi, though of Samnite stock, had hitherto bee
 on good terms with the Romans.

on before him to the senate in Rome the Etruscan B.C. 308
 deputations which had come to him seeking friendship, the consul was borne in triumph into the City, after gaining a success more brilliant even than the dictator's; indeed the glory of conquering the Samnites was largely diverted upon the lieutenants, Publius Decius and Marcus Valerius, of whom, at the next election, the people with great enthusiasm
 made the one consul and the other praetor.

XLI. In recognition of his remarkable conquest of Etruria, Fabius was continued in the consulship, and was given Decius for his colleague. Valerius was for the fourth time chosen praetor. The consuls cast lots for the commands, Etruria falling to Decius and Samnium to Fabius. The latter marched against Nuceria Alfaterna, and rejecting that city's overtures of peace because its people had declined it when it was offered them, laid siege to the place and forced it to surrender. A battle was fought with the Samnites, in which the enemy were defeated without much difficulty, nor would the engagement have been remembered but for the fact that it was the first time that the Marsi had made war against the Romans.¹ The Paeligni imitated
 the defection of the Marsi, and met with the same fate.

Decius, the other consul, was also successful in war. When he had frightened the Tarquinenses into furnishing corn for the army and seeking a truce for forty years, he captured by storm a number of strongholds belonging to the people of Volsinii.
 Some of these he dismantled, lest they should serve as a refuge for the enemy, and by devastating far and wide he made himself so feared that all who

A.U.C.
446 rorem sui fecit ut nomen omne Etruscum foedus ab
7 consule peteret. Ac de eo quidem nihil impetratum ; indutiae annuae datae. Stipendium exercitu Romano ab hoste in eum annum pensum et binae tunicae in militem exactae ; ea merces indutiarum fuit.

8 Tranquillas res iam in¹ Etruseis turbavit repentina
defectio Umbrorum, gentis integrae a cladibus belli, 9 nisi quod transitum exercitus ager senserat. Ii concitata omni iuventute sua et magna parte Etruscorum
ad rebellionem compulsa tantum exercitum fecerant
ut relieto post se in Etruria Decio ad oppugnandam
inde Romani ituros, magnifice de se ac contemptim 10 de Romanis loquentes, iactarent. Quod incepsum eorum ubi ad Decium consulem perlatum est, ad
urbem ex Etruria magnis itineribus pergit et in agro Pupiniensi ad famam intentus hostium consedit.
11 Nec Romae spernebatur Umbrorum bellum, et ipsae
minae metum ficerant expertis Gallica clade quam 12 intutam urbem incoherent. Itaque legati ad Fabium consulem missi sunt, ut si quid laxamenti a bello
Samnitium esset, in Umbriam propere exercitum 13 duceret. Dicto paruit consul magnisque itineribus ad Mevaniam, ubi tum copiae Umbrorum erant, perrexit.
14 Repens adventus consulis, quem procul Umbria in Samnio bello alio occupatum crediderant, ita exter-ruit Umbros ut alii recedendum ad urbes munitas,

¹ iam in Madvig : iam Ω.

¹ Livy has not mentioned this before.

² South of the Anio not far from Gabii. See xxvi. ix. 12.

³ In the neighbourhood of Perugia and Assisi.

bore the Etruscan name begged the consul to grant them a treaty. This privilege they were denied, but a truce for a year was granted them. They were required to furnish the Roman army with a year's pay and two tunics for each soldier: such was the price they paid for a truce.

The tranquillity which now obtained in Etruria was disturbed by a sudden revolt of the Umbrians, a people which had escaped all the distress of war, except that an army had passed through their territory.¹ Calling up all their fighting men, and inducing great part of the Etruscans to rebel, they mustered so large an army, that they boasted, with much glorifying of themselves and fleering at the Romans, that they would leave Decius behind them in Etruria and march off to the assault of Rome. When this purpose of theirs was reported to the consul Decius, he hastened by forced marches from Etruria towards the City, and encamped in the fields belonging to Pupinia,² eagerly waiting for word of their approach. At Rome no one made light of an Umbrian invasion. Their very threats had excited fear in those who had learnt from the Gallic disaster how unsafe was the City they inhabited. Accordingly envoys were dispatched to carry word to Fabius the consul, that if there were any slackening in the Samnite war he should with all speed lead his army into Umbria. The consul obeyed the order, and advanced by long marches to Mevania,³ where the forces of the Umbrians at that time lay.

The sudden arrival of the consul, whom they had believed to have his hands full with another war in Samnium, a long way from Umbria, so dismayed the Umbrians that some were for falling back on their

A.U.C. 15 quidam omittendum bellum censerent; plaga una ⁴⁴⁶ —Materinam ipsi appellant—non continuit modo
 ceteros in armis sed confestim ad certamen egit.
 16 Castra vallantem Fabium adorti sunt. Quos ubi effusos ruere in munimenta consul vidit, revocatos milites ab opere, prout loci natura tempusque patie-batur, ita instruxit; cohortatusque praedicatione vera qua in Tuscis, qua in Samnio partorum decorum exiguum appendicem Etrusci belli conficere iubet et vocis impiae poenas expetere, qua se urbem Romanam 17 oppugnaturos minati sint.¹ Haec tanta sunt alacritate militum audita ut clamor sua sponte ortus loquentem interpellaverit ducem. Ante imperium, deinde concentu² tubarum ac cornuum cursu effuso in hostem 18 feruntur. Non tamquam in viros aut armatos incur-runt; mirabilia dictu, signa primo eripi coepta signiferis, deinde ipsi signiferi trahi ad consulem, armatique milites ex acie in aciem transferri, et sicubi est certamen, scutis magis quam gladiis geritur
 res; umberibus incussaque ala sternuntur hostes.
 19 Plus capitur hominum quam caeditur, atque una vox
 ponere arma iubentium per totam fertur aciem.
 20 Itaque inter ipsum certamen facta deditio est a primis auctoribus belli. Postero insequentibusque

¹ sint Modius: sunt Ω.

² deinde concentu (contentu PU: concerta F: conuentu T) Ω: ante concentu M: ante concentum M³.

fortified cities, and others for giving up the war; B.C. 308 but one canton—which they themselves call Materina—not only kept the rest to their arms, but brought them to an immediate engagement. Fabius was entrenching his camp when they attacked him. As soon as he saw them rushing madly upon his ramparts, he recalled the soldiers from their work and drew them up, as time and the nature of the ground permitted, and encouraging them with a true relation of the honours they had won, some in Etruria and some in Samnium, bade them end this trivial sequel to the Etruscan war, and revenge upon the foe his impious threat that he would assault the City of Rome. These words were received by the soldiers with such alacrity that the speech of the general was interrupted by a spontaneous cheer. Then, before the command could be given, they hurled themselves—to the blare of horns and trumpets—with the wildest abandon against the enemy. They fought not as though their opponents had been men and armed; but—marvellous to relate—began with tearing the standards out of the bearers' hands, and then fell to dragging the bearers themselves before the consul and to bringing armed men over from the other line to their own; wherever they met with resistance, they did their work more with shields than with swords, swinging them from the shoulder and knocking down their enemies with the bosses. The slain were outnumbered by the prisoners, and all along the battle line one cry was heard: that they should lay down their arms. And so, while the battle was still going on, the surrender was made, by the men who had first advocated war. On the next and on succeeding

A.U.C.
446A.U.C.
47-448

diebus et ceteri Umbrorum populi deduntur; Oericulani sponsione in amicitiam accepti.

XLII. Fabius, alienae sortis victor belli, in suam 2 provinciam exercitum reduxit. Itaque ei ob res tam feliciter gestas, sicut priore anno populus continuaverat consulatum, ita senatus in insequentem annum, quo Ap. Claudius L. Volumnius consules fuerunt, prorogavit maxime Appio adversante imperium.

3 Appium censorem petisse consulatum comitiaque eius ab L. Furio tribuno plebis interpellata, donec se censura abdicarit,¹ in quibusdam annalibus invenio.

4 Creatus consul, cum collegae novum bellum, Sallentini² hostes decernerentur, Romae mansit ut urbanis artibus opes augeret quando belli decus penes alios esset.

5 Volumnium provinciae haud paenituit. Multa secunda proelia fecit, aliquot urbes hostium vi cepit. Praedae erat largitor et benignitatem per se gratam comitate adiuvabat militemque his artibus fecerat et periculi et laboris avidum.

6 Q. Fabius pro consule ad urbem Allifas cum Samnitium exercitu signis conlatis configit. Minime ambigua res fuit; fusi hostes atque in castra compulsi. Nec castra forent retenta, ni exiguum superfuisset

¹ abdicarit Ruperti: abdicavit Ω.

² Sallentini, Sigonius: salentini (-ne F) Ω.

¹ The senate had a grudge against Appius (see chap. xxx. § 1 f.), and so prolonged, unconstitutionally, the command of Fabius, and gave the other war to Volumnius.

days the other peoples of Umbria also capitulated : ^{B.C. 308}
the men of Oericulum were received into friendship
under a stipulation.

XLII. Fabius, having won a war assigned by lot ^{B.C. 307-306} to another man, led his army back to his own province. Just as in the preceding year the people had rewarded his successful campaign by re-electing him to the consulship, so now the senate continued him in command for the year to follow. The new consuls were Appius Claudius and Lucius Volumnius, the former of whom had strongly opposed the resolution.¹

I find in certain annals that Appius sought the consulship when censor, and that Lucius Furius, a tribune of the plebs, refused to let him stand until he should have resigned the censorship. The election over, his colleague was decreed the command in the new war—with the Sallentini—and Appius remained in Rome, to strengthen his power by civil arts, since the means of acquiring repute in war remained with others.

Volumnius had no cause to regret his assignment. He engaged in many successful battles and took several hostile towns by assault. Generous in his distribution of the spoil, he enhanced the effect of a liberality which was pleasing in itself by his friendly bearing—traits which had made his soldiers eager for toil and danger.

The proconsul Quintus Fabius fought near the city Allifae a pitched battle with the army of the Samnites. The result was anything but doubtful, for the enemy were routed and driven into their camp; and they could not have held the camp had there not been very little daylight left.

diei; ante noctem tamen sunt circumcessa et nocte
 7 custodita ne quis elabi posset. Postero die vixdum luce certa deditio fieri coepit et pacti qui Samnitium
 forent ut cum singulis vestimentis emitterentur;
 8 ii omnes sub iugum missi. Sociis Samnitium nihil cautum; ad septem milia sub corona veniere. Qui se civem Hernicum dixerat seorsus in custodia 9 habitus. Eos omnes Fabius Romam ad senatum misit; et cum quae situm esset dilectu an voluntarii 10 pro Samnitibus adversus Romanos bellassent per Latinos populos custodiendi dantur, iussique eam integrum rem novi consules P. Cornelius Arvina Q.
 Marcius Tremulus—hi enim iam creati erant—ad
 11 senatum referre. Id aegre passi Hernici; concilium populorum omnium habentibus Anagninis in circu
 quem Maritimum vocant praeter Aletrinatem Fer entinatemque et Verulanum omnes Hernici nominis populo Romano bellum indixerunt.

XLIII. In Samnio quoque, quia decesserat inde Fabius, novi motus exorti. Calatia et Sora praesidia que quae in his Romana erant expugnata et in 2 captivorum corpora militum foede saevitum. Itaque eo P. Cornelius cum exercitu missus; Marcio novi hostes—iam enim Anagninis Hernicisque aliis bellum
 3 iussum erat—decernuntur. Primo ita omnia oppor-

¹ The Hernici had been at peace with the Romans ever since their subjugation in 358 B.C. (vii. xv. 9).

² Calatia was mentioned in chap. ii. § 2 as a Samnite town, and its capture by the Romans in 314 B.C. is noted in chap. xxviii. § 6. Sora, on the borders of the Hernici, was taken in the same year (chap. xxiv. § 14).

BOOK IX. XLII. 6-XLIII. 3

Even so they were invested before dark, and guards were posted in the night to prevent anyone's escaping. Next day, before it was well light, they began to surrender. The Samnites among them bargained to be dismissed in their tunics; all these were sent under the yoke. The allies of the Samnites were protected by no guarantee, and were sold into slavery, to the number of seven thousand. Those who gave themselves out for Hernic citizens were detained apart in custody, and Fabius sent them all to the senate in Rome. There an enquiry was held as to whether they had been conscripted or had fought voluntarily for the Samnites against the Romans; after which they were parcelled out amongst the Latins to be guarded, and a resolution was passed directing the new consuls, Publius Cornelius Arvina and Quintus Marcius Tremulus—for these men had been elected—to refer the matter to the senate for fresh action. This the Hernici resented. The people of Anagnia assembled a council of all the states in the circus which they call the Maritime Circus, and all of the Hernic name, excepting the inhabitants of Aletrium, Ferentinum and Verulae, declared war on the Roman People.¹

XLIII. In Samnium, too, the departure of Fabius was the cause of fresh disturbances. Calatia and Sora with their Roman garrisons were taken by assault, and the captured soldiers were treated with shameful rigour.² Accordingly Publius Cornelius was dispatched in that direction with an army. The new enemies—for by this time war had been declared on the men of Anagnia and the other Hernici—were allotted to Marcius. At the outset of the campaign the enemy were so successful in

LIVY

A.U.C.
47-448

tuna loca hostes inter consulum castra interceperunt
 4 ut pervadere expeditus nuntius non posset et per aliquot dies incerti rerum omnium suspensique de statu alterius uterque consul ageret, Romamque is metus manaret, adeo ut omnes iuniores sacramento adigerentur atque ad subita rerum duo iusti scribe-
 5 rentur exercitus. Ceterum Hernicum bellum nequam pro praesenti terrore ac vetusta¹ gentis gloria
 6 fuit. Nihil usquam dictu dignum ausi, trinis castris intra paucos dies exuti, triginta dierum indurias ita ut ad senatum Romanum legatos mitterent, pacti sunt
 7 bimestri stipendio frumentoque et singulis in militem tunieis. Ab senatu ad Marcium reiecti, cui senatus consulto permisum de Hernicis erat, isque eam gentem in ditionem accepit.

8 Et in Samnio alter consul superior viribus, locis impeditior erat. Omnia itinera obsaepserant hostes saltusque pervios ceperant, ne qua subvehiri commeatus possent; neque eos, cum cottidie signa in aciem consul proferret, elicere ad certamen poterat;
 9 satisque apparebat neque Samnitem certamen prae-
 10 sens nec Romanum dilationem belli laturum. Adventus Marci, qui Hernicis subactis maturavit collegae 11 venire auxilio, moram certaminis hosti exemit. Nam ut qui ne alteri quidem exercitui se ad certamen

¹ vetusta Gronovius: vetustae Klockius: vetustate Ω.

B.C.
307-306

seizing all the strategic points between the camps of the consuls, that not even a nimble courier could get through, and for some days the consuls were kept in uncertainty regarding everything and could only speculate about one another's state. Fears for their safety even extended to Rome, where all of military age were given the oath and two full armies were enlisted, to meet any sudden emergencies. But the war with the Hernici by no means answered to the present panic or to the nation's old renown. They ventured nothing to speak of at any point, and having lost three camps in the space of a few days they bargained for a thirty days' truce, to enable them to send envoys to the senate in Rome, and delivered up two months' pay and corn, and a tunic for every soldier. The senate sent them back to Marcius, having passed a resolution empowering him to deal with the Hernici as he saw fit. He received their submission on terms of unconditional surrender.

In Samnium the other consul was also stronger than the enemy, but was more embarrassed by the character of the ground. The enemy had blockaded all the roads and seized the practicable passes, to prevent supplies being brought up anywhere. But though the consul offered battle daily, he could not entice them to fight. It was quite apparent that the Samnites would not accept an immediate engagement, nor the Romans endure any prolongation of the war. The arrival of Marcius, who, having subdued the Hernici, made haste to come to the assistance of his colleague, deprived the enemy of any power to delay the struggle. For since they had not considered themselves equal to a credidissent pares, coniungi utique passi duos consulares exercitus nihil crederent superesse spei, advenientem incomposito agmine Marcium adgrediuntur. Raptim conlatae sarcinae in medium, et prout tempus patiebatur instructa acies. Clamor primum in stativa perlatus, dein conspectus procul pulvis tumultum apud alterum consulem in castris 12 fecit; isque confestim arma capere iussis raptimque eductis in aciem militibus transversam hostium aciem atque alio certamine occupatam invadit, clamitans 13 suum flagitium fore si alterum exercitum utriusque victoriae compotem sinerent fieri nec ad se sui 14 belli vindicarent decus. Qua impetum dederat perrumpit aciemque per medium in castra hostium tendit et vacua defensoribus capit atque incendit. 15 Quae ubi flagrantia Marcianus miles conspexit et hostes respexere, tum passim fuga coepit Samnitium fieri; sed omnia obtinet caedes, nec in ullam partem tutum perfugium est.

16 Iam triginta milibus hostium caesis signum receptui consules dederant colligebantque in unum copias in vicem inter se grātantes, cum repente visae procul hostium novae cohortes, quae in supplementum scriptae fuerant, integravere caedem. 17 In quas nec iussu consulū nec signo accepto victores

¹ i.e. in a hollow square, as the words in medium show.

BOOK IX. XLIII. 11-18

battle with even one army, and believed that, once they had suffered two consular armies to unite, there would be no hope for them, they made an attack on Marcius as he was approaching in loose marching order. Hastily throwing down their packs in the midst, the Romans formed up¹ as well as time permitted. The shouting was the first thing that was noticed in the camp of Cornelius. Then, far off, a cloud of dust was descried, and caused a commotion in the camp. The consul ordered his men to arm, and leading them quickly out into line attacked the enemy in the flank, when their hands were full with another struggle, crying out that it would be a burning shame if they let the other army win both victories, and failed to claim for themselves the glory of their own campaign. Bursting through at the point where he had charged, he advanced through the enemy's line, and capturing their camp, which was empty of defenders, set fire to it. When the soldiers of Marcius saw the blaze, and the enemy, looking over their shoulders, saw it too, the flight of the Samnites soon became general; but at every point death blocked the way, and there was no escaping anywhere.

Thirty thousand of the enemy had already fallen, and the consuls had sounded the recall and were proceeding to assemble their forces in one body, amid the mutual congratulations and rejoicings of the men, when suddenly some new cohorts of the Samnites, which had been levied as reliefs, were made out in the distance, and occasioned a renewal of the slaughter. The victors rushed upon them, without orders from the consuls or receiving any

A.U.C.
447-448

- vadunt, malo tirocinio imbuendum Samnitem clamitantes. Indulgent consules legionum ardori, ut qui probe seirent novum militem hostium inter percuslos fuga veteranos ne temptando quidem satis certamini fore. Nec eos opinio fefellit: omnes Samnitum copiae, veteres novaeque, montes proximos fuga capiunt. Eo et Romana erigitur acies, nec quicquam satis tuti loci viciis est, et de iugis quae ceperant funduntur; iamque una voce omnes pacem petebant.
- Tum trium mensum frumento imperato et annuo stipendio ac singulis in militem tunicis ad senatum pacis oratores missi.
- Cornelius in Samnio relictus: Marcius de Hernicis triumphans in urbem rediit, statuaque equestris in foro decreta est, quae ante templum Castoris posita est.
- Hernicorum tribus populis, Aletrinati Verulano Ferrentinati, qui id¹ maluerunt quam civitatem, suae leges redditae, conubiumque inter ipsos, quod aliquamdiu soli Hernicorum habuerunt, permissum. Anagninis quique alii² arma Romanis intulerant civitas sine suffragii latione: data concilia conubiaque adempta et magistratibus praeter quam sacerorum curatione interdictum.
- Eodem anno aedes Salutis a C. Iunio Bubulco

¹ qui il Harant: qui FT² or T³ (marg.): quia Ω.² quinque alii H. G. Mueller: quique (quicque D? LA) Ω.

¹ The temple of Castor and Pollux had been vowed at the battle of Lake Regillus, 299 B.C., and dedicated fifteen years later (II. xx. 12. and xlvi. 5).

signal, exclaiming that the Samnites must begin their soldiering with a bitter lesson. The consuls indulged the ardour of the legions, being well aware that the enemy's recruits, in the midst of routed veterans, would scarce be equal to so much as an attempt at fighting. They were not mistaken. All the forces of the Samnites, old and new, broke and fled to the nearest mountains, up which the Romans too advanced in pursuit of them. The conquered could find no refuge anywhere that afforded safety, but were driven pell-mell from the ridges where they had made a stand. And now with one voice they all begged for peace. They were required to furnish corn for three months, with a year's pay and a tunie for each Roman soldier, and envoys were then dispatched to the senate to sue for terms.

Cornelius was left in Samnium. Marcius returned to the City, which he entered in a triumph over the Hernici. An equestrian statue in the Forum was decreed him and was erected in front of the temple of Castor.¹ To the three Hernic peoples of Aletrium, Verulæ, and Ferentinum their own laws were restored, because they preferred them to Roman citizenship, and they were given the right to intermarry with each other—a privilege which for some time they were the only Hernici to enjoy. The people of Anagnia and such others as had borne arms against the Romans were admitted to citizenship without the right of voting. They were prohibited from holding councils and from intermarrying, and were allowed no magistrates save those who had charge of religious rites.

In the same year the censor Gaius Junius

A.U.C.
447-448

censore locata est, quam consul bello Samnitium
voverat. Ab eodem colleague eius M. Valerio

26 Maximo viae per agros publica impensa factae. Et cum Carthaginiensibus eodem anno foedus tertio renovatum, legatisque eorum, qui ad id venerant, comiter munera missa.

A.U.C.
449

XLIV. Dictatorem idem annus habuit P. Cornelium Scipionem cum magistro equitum P. Decio
2 Mure. Ab his, propter quae creati erant, comitia consularia habita, quia neuter consulum potuerat¹
3 bello abesse. Creati consules L. Postumius Ti.² Minucius. Hos consules Piso Q. Fabio et P. Decio suggerit biennio exempto quo Claudium Volumnium que et Cornelium cum Marcio consules factos tradidi-4 mus. Memoriare fugerit³ in annalibus digerendis, an consulto binos consules, falsos ratus, transcenderit, incertum est.

5 Eodem anno in campum Stellatem agri Campani
6 Samnitium incursiones factae. Itaque ambo consules in Samnium missi cum diversas regiones, Tifernum Postumius Bovianum Minucius petisset, Postumi
prius ductu ad Tifernum pugnatum. Alii haud dubie Samnites victos ac viginti milia hominum capta tradunt, alii Marte aequo discessum et 8 Postumium metum simulantem nocturno itinere

¹ potuerat A^xς: potuerant Ω: poterant F.

² Ti. Sigonius (Diod. xx. lxxxii. 1, C.I.L. i², p. 132): t
M P U T² A²; t P: ÷ (= et) F: et M⁴: wanting in OTDLA.

³ memoriane fugerit ς: memoriae (or -e)ne fugerit Ω:
memorie ne fuerit U: wanting in O.

¹ On the Quirinal.

² vii. xxvii. 2 and note. Per. XIII., which speaks of a fourth treaty, would be in agreement with the present passage.

³ Lucius Calpurnius Piso Frugi, the annalist, cos. 133 B.C.

Bubulcus let the contract for the temple of Safety,¹ which he had vowed, while consul, during the Samnite war. He and his colleague, Marcus Valerius Maximus, built roads through the country-side at the public costs. In this year also the treaty with the Carthaginians was renewed for the third time,² and their ambassadors, who had come for the purpose of arranging it, were treated with courtesy and given presents.

XLIV. The same year had a dictator in the person of Publius Cornelius Scipio, the master of the horse being Publius Decius Mus. These men held a consular election—for to this end they had been appointed, since neither consul had been able to leave the seat of war. The consuls chosen were Lucius Postumius and Tiberius Minucius. Piso³ makes these men follow Quintus Fabius and Publius Decius, omitting the two years in which we have placed the consulship of Claudius and Volumnius and that of Cornelius and Marcius. Whether in the redaction of his annals he forgot them, or omitted two sets of consuls purposely, as not authentic, is uncertain.

In that year also the Samnites made forays upon the Campus Stellatis⁴ in Campania. Both consuls were accordingly dispatched into Samnium in different directions, Postumius marching on Tifernum, and Minucius on Bovianum. The fighting began at Tifernum, where Postumius commanded. Some relate that the Samnites were decisively beaten and that twenty thousand prisoners were taken; others that the armies quitted the field on even terms, and that Postumius, feigning fear, in the night withdrew his ¹ This was a tract forming part of the Ager Falernus, later celebrated for its choice wine.

A.U.C.
449

clam in montes copias abduxisse, hostes secutos
 duo milia inde locis munitis et ipsos consedisse.
 9 Consul ut stativa tuta copiosaque—et ita erant—
 petisse videretur, postquam et munimentis castra
 firmavit et omni apparatu rerum utilium instruxit, 10 reliquo firmo praesidio de vigilia tertia, qua duci proxime potest, expeditas legiones ad collegam, et 11 ipsum aduersus alios sedentem, ducit. Ibi auctore Postumio Minucius cum hostibus signa confert, et,
 cum anceps proelium in multum diei processisset,
 tum Postumius integris legionibus defessam iam 12 aciem hostium improviso invadit. Itaque cum lassi-tudo ac volnera fugam quoque praepedissent, occidi-
 one occisi hostes, signa unum et viginti capta atque 13 inde ad castra Postumi perrectum. Ibi duo victores exercitus percussum iam fama hostem adorti fundunt fugantque; signa militaria sex et viginti capta et imperator Samnitium Statius Gellius¹ multique alii 14 mortales et castra utraque capta. Et Bovianum urbs² postero die copta oppugnari brevi capit, magna-que gloria rerum gestarum consules triumpharunt.
 15 Minucium consulem, cum volnere gravi relatum in castra, mortuum quidam auctores sunt, et M. Fulvium in locum eius consulem suffectum, et ab eo, cum ad
 exercitum Minuci missus esset, Bovianum captum.

¹ Gellius Sigonius (Diod. xx. xc. 4 Γέλλιος Γάιος): Cellius Ω.² urbs Crerier: ubi Ω.

B.C. 305

forces secretly to the mountains, where the enemy followed him and themselves entrenched a camp, at a distance of two miles from his. The consul, that it might appear to have been his object to gain a position at once secure and abounding in supplies,—and such indeed it was—having fortified his camp and equipped it with all manner of useful things, left in it a strong garrison, and in the third watch led his legions in light marching order by the most direct route to his colleague, who likewise lay in camp, facing another army. There, at the instigation of Postumius, Minucius gave battle to the enemy; and when the doubtful struggle had been prolonged until late in the afternoon, Postumius with his fresh legions fell unexpectedly upon the now jaded forces of their opponents. The Samnites, debarred by their weariness and wounds even from flight, were utterly annihilated, and the Romans, having taken twenty-one standards, set out for the camp of Postumius. There the two victorious armies assailed the enemy, already dismayed by the tidings of the other battle, and overwhelmingly routed them, capturing six-and-twenty standards, the commander of the Samnites—Statius Gellius—and many other prisoners, besides both camps. On the following day they began the siege of the city of Bovianum, and on its capture, which quickly ensued, the consuls crowned their glorious achievements with a triumph. Some writers state that Minucius the consul was severely wounded and expired after being carried back to his camp. They add that Marcus Fulvius was made consul suffect in his place, and that it was he who, being sent out to the army of Minucius, captured Bovianum.

LIVY

A.U.C. 16 Eo anno Sora Arpinum Cesennia recepta ab Samnitibus.
 449 Herculis magnum simulacrum in Capitolio posatum dedicatumque.

A.U.C. 450 XLV. P. Sulpicio Saverrione¹ P. Sempronio Sopho consulibus Samnites, seu finem seu dilationem belli
 2 quaerentes, legatos de pace Roman misere. Quibus suppliciter agentibus responsum est, nisi saepe bellum parantes pacem petissent Samnites, oratione ultiro citro habita de pace transigi potuisse; nunc, quando verba vana ad id locorum fuerint, rebus standum
 3 esse. P. Sempronium consulem cum exercitu brevi in Samnio fore; eum, ad bellum pacemne inclinent animi, falli non posse; comperta omnia senatui relaturum; decedentem ex Samnio consulem legati
 4 sequerentur. Eo anno cum pacatum Samnium exercitus Romanus benigne praebito commeatu per agrasset, foedus antiquum Samnitibus redditum.
 5 Ad Aequos inde, veteres hostes, ceterum per multos annos sub specie infidae pacis quietos, versa arma Romana, quod incolumi Hernico nomine missit-
 6 averant simul cum iis Samniti auxilia et post Hernicos subactos universa prope gens sine dissimulatione consilii publici ad hostes deseiverat; et postquam

¹ Saverrione Siginius (X. ix. 14, C.I.L. i², p. 45); auerrione (auerione A) Ω.

¹ Site unknown.

² Perhaps to appease the god for the indignity mentioned in chap. xxix. § 9.

³ In 354 B.C. the Samnites had sought and obtained a treaty with the Romans, upon what terms is not known, but they were doubtless liberal (vii. xix. 4)

⁴ Since 388 B.C. (vi. iv. 8).

⁵ Chap. xlvi. § 8, where, however, the Aequi are not specified.

BOOK IX. XLIV. 16—XLV. 6

In that year Sora, Arpinum, and Cesennia¹ were b.c. 305 won back from the Samnites. The great statue of Hercules was set up and dedicated on the Capitol.²

XLV. In the consulship of Publius Sulpicius b.c. 304 Saverio and Publius Sempronius Sophus, the Samnites, whether seeking to end or only to postpone hostilities, sent envoys to Rome to treat for peace. To their humble supplications the answer was returned, that if the Samnites had not frequently sought peace while preparing for war, a treaty could have been arranged by mutual discussion: as it was, since words had hitherto proved of no effect, the Romans must needs take their stand on facts. Publius Sempronius, the consul, would shortly be in Samnium with an army; he was one whom they would be unable to deceive as to whether their hearts inclined to peace or war; after a thorough investigation he would report his findings to the senate; and on his leaving Samnium their envoys might attend him. The Roman army marched all over Samnium; the people were peaceable and furnished the army liberally with supplies; accordingly their ancient treaty was in that year restored again to the Samnites.³

The arms of Rome were then directed against the Aequi, who had been her enemies of old, but for many years past had remained quiet,⁴ under colour of a peace which they observed but treacherously. The reason for making war on them was as follows: before the overthrow of the Hernici they had repeatedly joined with them in sending assistance to the Samnites,⁵ and after the subjugation of the Hernici, almost the entire nation had gone over to the enemy, without attempting to disguise their policy;

icto Romae cum Samnitibus foedere fetiales venerant 7 res repetitum, temptationem aiebant esse ut terrore incusso belli Romanos se fieri paterentur; quod quanto opere optandum foret Hernicos docuisse, cum quibus
 licuerit suas leges Romanae civitati praeoptaverint:
 8 quibus legendi quid mallent copia non fuerit pro poena necessariam civitatem fore. Ob haec volgo in conciliis iactata populus Romanus bellum fieri Aequis 9 iussit; consulesque ambo ad novum profecti bellum
 quattuor milia a castris hostium consederunt.

10 Aequorum exercitus, ut qui suo nomine permultos
 annos imbelles egissent, tumultuario similis, sine 11 ducibus certis, sine imperio, trepidare. Alii exeun-dum in aciem, alii castra tuenda censem; movet plerosque vastatio futura agrorum ac deinceps cum 12 levibus praesidiis urbium relictarum excidia. Itaque postquam inter multas sententias una, quae omissa
 cura communium ad respectum suarum quemque 13 rerum vertit, est¹ audita, ut prima vigilia diversi e castris ad deportanda omnia tuendasque moenibus urbes² abirent, cuncti eam sententiam ingenti ad-14 sensu accepere. Palatis hostibus per agros prima luce Romani signis prolatis in acie consistunt, et ubi

¹ vertit, est Madvig: uertisset (-ent P) Ω: auertisset O.

² tuendasque moenibus urbes Madvig Σ: tuendasque moe-nibus in urbes Ω: tuendasque in omnibus urbes O: tuendosque moenibus se in urbes H. J. Mueller.

¹ Cf. chap. xlvi. 23 f. for the two groups.

² i.e. while Aequians had volunteered for service in other armies, they had engaged in no war as a nation—at any rate with Rome—since 388 B.C. (VI. iv. 8).

and when fetials had applied to them for reparation, B.C. 304 after the adoption of the Samnite treaty at Rome, they had persistently asserted that the Romans were attempting under threats of war to intimidate them into becoming Roman citizens; and how little that was a thing to be desired had been shown, they said, by the Hernici, since those who had been permitted to do so had chosen their own laws in preference to Roman citizenship, while those who had not been given an option were to have citizenship thrust upon them as a punishment.¹ Because of such expressions, publicly uttered in their assemblies, the Roman People decreed that war should be made upon the Aequi. Both consuls set out for the new seat of operations, and took up a position four miles from the enemy's camp.

The army of the Aequi, who for many years had made no war on their own account,² like a hastily levied militia, under no definite commanders and subject to no supreme authority, were in a state of panic. Some were for offering battle, others for defending the camp. The consideration that affected most of them was the devastation which their farms would suffer and the subsequent destruction of their cities, which they had left inadequately garrisoned. And so when a proposal was heard—amongst many others—which disregarded the common welfare and made every one think of his own interest, to wit, that in the first watch they should leave the camp, and going their several ways, carry off all their possessions from the fields and defend their cities by means of their walls, they all with loud acclaim adopted it. The enemy were scattered over the countryside when at break of day the Romans came

LIVY

A.U.C. nemo obvius ibat, pleno gradu ad castra hostium 450 15 tendunt. Ceterum postquam ibi neque stationes pro portis nec quemquam in vallo nec fremitum consuetum castrorum animadverterunt, insolito silentio 16 moti metu insidiarum subsistunt. Transgressi deinde vallum cum deserta omnia invenissent, pergunt hostem vestigiis sequi. Sed vestigia in omnes aequa ferentia partes, ut in dilapsis passim, primo errorem 17 faciebant; post per exploratores compertis hostium consiliis ad singulas urbes circumferendo bello unum et triginta oppida intra dies quinquaginta, omnia oppugnando, ceperunt, quorum pleraque diruta atque incensa, nomenque Aequorum prope ad inter- 18 nacionem deletum. De Aequis triumphatum: ex emploque eorum clades fuit, ut Marrucini Marsi Paeligni Frentani¹ mitterent Romam oratores pacis petendae amicitiaeque. His populis foedus petentibus datum.

XLVI. Eodem anno Cn. Flavius Cn. filius² scriba, patre libertino humili fortuna ortus, ceterum callidus vir 2 et facundus, aedilis curulis fuit. Invenio in quibusdam annalibus, cum appareret aedilibus fierique se pro tribu aedilem videret neque accipi nomen quia scriptum ficeret, tabulam posuisse et iurasse se scriptum

¹ Frentani Sigonius (chap. xvi. § 1 and Conway, Ital. Dial. p. 212): feretani M.A²: feretrani Ω.

² Cn. filius A²: cū fil l²: gn fil T: various corruptions Ω.

¹ The tribes were beginning to enter their votes in favour of Flavius, but the aedile presiding at the election refused to admit his candidacy, on the score that as an apparitor, a paid civil servant, he might not hold a magistracy. Flavius thereupon renounced his position as secretary and declined to serve as such at the election. With Livy's narrative in this chap. cf. Plin. N. H. xxxiii. i. 17-19, and Gellius, vii. (vi) 9, who quotes Piso as his authority, and uses language so much out and formed in order of battle, and encountering ^{B.C. 304} nobody, advanced at a quick pace towards the Aequian camp. But not perceiving any outposts before the gates or anybody on the rampart, and missing the usual noises of a camp, they were troubled by the unaccustomed silence, and apprehending an ambush, halted. Later, when they had scaled the rampart and found everything deserted, they attempted to follow the enemy by his tracks; but the tracks, which led in all directions—as they would when an army had dispersed—at first bewildered them. Afterwards they found out through their scouts what the enemy designed to do; and attacking his cities in succession, one after another, they captured thirty-one of them within fifty days, in every instance by assault. Of these the greater number were dismantled and burnt, and the Aequian name was almost blotted out. A triumph was celebrated over the Aequi; and warned by the example of their downfall, the Marrucini, Marsi, Paeligni, and Frentani sent ambassadors to Rome to sue for peace and friendship. These nations, at their request, were granted a treaty of alliance.

XLVI. In the same year a government clerk, Gnaeus Flavius, the son of Gnaeus, was curule aedile. Born in humble circumstances—his father being a freedman—he was, for the rest, a man of shrewdness and eloquence. I find in certain annals that being in attendance upon the aediles, and perceiving that the tribes were supporting him for aedile, but that his name was thrown out because he was acting as a recorder, he put away his tablet and took an oath that he would keep no record.¹ like Livy's as to suggest that this annalist was Livy's source also.

LIVY

A.U.C. 3 non facturum; quem aliquanto ante desisse scriptum 450 facere arguit Macer Licinius tribunatu ante gesto
 triumviratibusque, nocturno altero, altero coloniae 4 deducendae. Ceterum, id quod haud discrepat, contumacia adversus contemnentes humilitatem suam
 5 nobiles certavit; civile ius, repositum in penetralibus pontificum, evolgavit fastosque circa forum in albo
 6 proposuit, ut quando lege agi posset sciretur; aedem Concordiae in area Volcani summa invidia nobilium
 dedicavit; coactusque consensu populi Cornelius Barbatus pontifex maximus verba praeire, cum more maiorum negaret nisi consulem aut imperatorem 7 posse templum dedicare. Itaque ex auctoritate senatus latum ad populum est ne quis templum aramve
 iniussu senatus aut tribunorum plebei partis maioris 8 dedicaret. Haud memorabilem rem per se, nisi documentum sit adversus superbiam nobilium plebeiae 9 libertatis, referam. Ad collegam aegrum visendi causa Flavius cum venisset consensuque nobilium adulescentium, qui ibi adsidabant, adsurrectum ei non esset, curulem adferri sellam eo iussit ac de sede¹ honoris sui anxios invidia inimicos spectavit.
 10 Ceterum Flavium dixerat aedilem forensis factio, Ap.

¹ de sede Siesbye: sede Ω.

¹ These were commonly called tresviri capitales, and were police commissioners, who besides the duty referred to in the text, were charged with assisting the magistrates who had criminal jurisdiction, and particularly with executing sentences of death. Liv. Per. xi. would indicate that the office was not introduced until about 289 B.C.

Licinius Macer alleges that he had ceased some time B.C. 304 before to act as secretary, having been already a tribune, and on two occasions a triumvir, once on the commission which had charge of the night-watch,¹ and again on one appointed to found a colony. At all events there is no difference of opinion about the stubbornness of his contention with the nobles, who despised his lowly birth. He published the formulae of the civil law, which had been filed away in the secret archives of the pontiffs, and posted up the calendar on white notice-boards about the Forum, that men might know when they could bring an action. He dedicated a temple of Concord in the precinct of Vulcan, greatly to the resentment of the nobles; and Cornelius Barbatus, the chief pontiff, was forced by the unanimous wishes of the people to dictate the form of words to him, though he asserted that by custom of the elders none but a consul or commanding general might dedicate a temple. So, in accordance with a senatorial resolution, a measure was enacted by the people providing that no one should dedicate a temple or an altar without the authorization of the senate or a majority of the tribunes of the plebs.—I will relate an incident, of no importance in itself, which may serve to show how the plebs asserted their liberties against the arrogance of the nobles. Flavius had come to make a call upon a colleague who was sick, and the young nobles who were sitting by his bed with one consent omitted to rise on his entering; whereupon he ordered his curule chair to be fetched in, and from his official seat gazed at his adversaries, who were choking with resentment. Now Flavius had been elected aedile by the faction of the market-place,

A.U.C. Claudi censura vires nacta, qui senatum primus 450 11 libertinorum filiis lectis inquinaverat, et posteaquam eam lectionem nemo ratam habuit nec in curia adeptus erat quas petierat opes, urbanis¹ humilibus per omnes tribus divisis forum et campum corrupit.
 12 Tantumque Flavi comitia indignitatis habuerunt ut plerique nobilium anulos aureos et phaleras depone-rent. Ex eo tempore in duas partes discessit civitas :
 13 aliud integer populus, fautor et cultor bonorum,
 14 aliud forensis factio tendebat,² donec Q. Fabius et
 P. Decius censores facti, et Fabius simul concordiae causa, simul ne humillimorum in manu comitia essent, omnem forensem turbam excretam in quattuor tribus 15 coniecit urbanasque eas appellavit. Adeoque eam rem acceptam gratis animis ferunt ut Maximi cogno-men, quod tot victoriis non pepererat, hac ordinum temperatione pareret. Ab eodem institutum dicitur ut equites idibus Quintilibus transveharentur.

¹ urbanis Gronovius : urbanas Ω.

² tendebat F & Maltby : tenebat Ω (Walters and Conway cf. Cic. Par. I. 14.)

¹ The centuriate comitia met in the Campus Martius, the tribal comitia in the Forum. Membership in the former assembly—now for the first time imparted to the tradesmen and artisans who were not freeholders—implied also membership in the latter. The result of this reform was to extend the franchise to a large class of citizens, many of whom were men of substance.

which had become powerful in consequence of the b.c. 304 censorship of Appius Claudius. Claudius had been the first to debase the senate by the appointment of the sons of freedmen, and afterwards, when no one allowed the validity of his selection, and he had failed to gain the influence in the senate-house which had been his object, he had distributed the humble denizens of the City amongst all the tribes, and had thus corrupted the Forum and the Campus Martius.¹ And so great was the indignation over the election of Flavius that many of the nobles laid aside their golden rings and medals. From that time the citizens were divided into two parties: the men of integrity, who favoured and cherished right principles, tended one way, the rabble of the market-place another; until Quintus Fabius and Publius Decius became censors, and Fabius, partly for the sake of harmony, partly that the elections might not be in the hands of the basest of the people, culled out all the market-place mob and cast them into four tribes, to which he gave the name of Urban. The arrangement, they say, was so gratefully received, that by this regulation of the orders he purchased the surname of the Great, which not all his victories had been able to procure him. It was Fabius too, so it is said, who instituted the parade of the knights on the fifteenth of July.

LIBRI IX PERIOCHA

T. Veturius Spurius Postumius coss. apud furcas Caudinas deducto iu locum artum exercitu, cum spes nulla esset evadendi, foedere cum Samnitibus facto et sescentis equitibus Romanis obsidibus datis ita exercitum abduxerunt ut omnes sub iugum mitterentur ; idemque auctore Spurio Postumio cos. qui in senatu suaserat ut eorum deditione quorum culpa tam deforme foedus ictum erat, publica fides liberaretur, cum duobus trib. pl. et omnibus qui foedus spoponderant dediti Samnitibus non sunt recepti. nec multo post fusis a Papirio Cursore Samnitibus et sub iugum missis receptisque sescentis equitibus Romanis qui obsides dati erant, pudor flagitii prioris abolitus est. tribus duae adiectae sunt, Oufentina¹ et Falerna. Suessa et Pontia coloniae deductae sunt. Ap. Claudius censor aquam perduxit ; viam stravit quae Appia vocata est, libertinorum filios in senatum legit. ideoque, quoniam is ordo indignis inquinatus videbatur, sequentis anni coss. senatum observaverunt, quem ad modum ante proximos censores fuerat. res praeterea contra Apulos et Etruscos² et Umbros et Marsos et Paelignos et Aequos et Samnites, quibus foedus restitutum est, prospere gestas con-tinet. Cn. Flavius³ scriba, libertino patre natus, aedilis curulis fuit per forensem factionem creatus, quae, cum comitia et campum turbaret et in his propter nimias vires dominaretur. a Q. Fabio censore in quattuor tribus redacta

¹ Oufentina Hertz : ofentina (or osfentina) MSS.

² et Etruscos cod. Bergianus : Etruscos MSS.

³ Cn. Flavius edd. : C. Flavius MSS.

SUMMARY OF BOOK IX

TITUS VETURIUS and Spurius Postumius, the consuls, having led their army into a narrow place at the Caudine Forks, when there was no hope of escaping, made a treaty with the Samnites, and having given six hundred Roman knights as hostages, got their army off, on condition that all should be sent under the yoke.—And these same men having been delivered up to the Samnites, together with two tribunes of the plebs and all those who had guaranteed the treaty—on the suggestion of Spurius Postumius the consul, who had advised the senate that the pledge of the State should be redeemed by the surrender of those by whose fault so disgraceful a treaty had been made—were by them rejected. Not long after, the Samnites were routed by Papirus Cursor and sent beneath the yoke, and the six hundred Roman knights who had been given as hostages were recovered, thus wiping out the shame of the earlier disgrace. Two tribes were added, the Oufentina and the Falerna. Colonies were planted at Suessa and Pontia. Appius Claudius the censor completed an aqueduct; paved the road which was called the Appian Way; and admitted the sons of freedmen to the senate, for which reason, since that order appeared to have been polluted with unworthy members, the consuls of the following year kept the senate as it had been before the last censors. The book also contains successful campaigns against the Apulians, the Etruscans, the Umbrians, the Marsi, the Paeligni, the Aequi, and the Samnites, to whom their treaty was restored. Gnaeus Flavius, a government clerk and a freedman's son, was elected curule aedile by the faction of the market-place, which since it threw into confusion the comitia and the Campus Martius, which it dominated by its overweening strength, was by Quintus Fabius the censor divided up into four tribes.

LIVY

est, quas urbanas appellavit;¹ eaque res Fabio Maximo nomen dedit. in hoc libro mentionem habet Alexandri, qui temporibus his fuit, et aestimatis populi R. viribus, quae tunc erant, colligit si Alexander in Italiā traiecerat, non tam ei victoriam de populo Romano fore quam de iis gentibus quas ad orientem imperio suo subiecerat.

¹ quas urbanas appellavit cod. Guelferb.: omitted by best MSS.

SUMMARY OF BOOK IX

which he called “urban”; and this circumstance procured Fabius his surname of Maximus. In this book the author mentions Alexander, who lived in those times, and, after appraising the strength of the Roman people in that age, gathers that if Alexander had crossed into Italy, he would not have gained the victory over the Roman People, as he had done over those races which he subjugated in the Orient.

BOOK X

LIBER X

I. L. Genucio Ser. Cornelio consulibus ab externis ferme bellis otium fuit. Soram atque Albam coloniae deductae. Albam in Aequos sex milia colonorum
2 scripta: Sora agri Volsci fuerat, sed possederant
3 Samnites; eo quattuor milia hominum missa. Eodem anno Arpinatibus Trebulanisque civitas data. Frusinates nates tertia parte agri damnati, quod Hernicos ab eis sollicitatos compertum, capitaque coniurationis
eius quaestione ab consulibus ex senatus consulto¹ 4 habita virgis caesi ac securi percussi. Tamen ne prorsus imbellem agerent annum, parva expeditio in Umbriam facta est, quod nuntiabatur ex spelunca qua-
5 dam excursiones armatorum in agros fieri. In eam speluncam penetratum cum signis est, et ex loco²
obscuro multa volnera accepta maximeque lapidum
ictu, donec altero specus eius ore—nam pervius erat—
invento utraeque fauces congestis lignis accensae.
6 Ita intus fumo ac vapore ad duo milia armatorum, ruentia novissime in ipsas flamas, dum evadere
tendunt, absumpta.

¹ ex senatus consulto *A*²: ex sōc MPT: ex sēc ODLA? ex
sēc *P*²: exe·c·F.

² ex loco Malvrig: ex eo (ea O) loco Ω.

BOOK X

I. IN the consulship of Lucius Genucius and Servius Cornelius there was in general a respite from foreign wars. Colonies were established at Sora and Alba. Six thousand settlers were enrolled for Alba, in the Aequian country. Sora had belonged to the territory of the Volsci, but the Samnites had got possession of it; to this place were sent four thousand men. In this year also the Arpinates and Trebulani were granted citizenship. The Frusinates were mulcted in one-third of their land, because it was discovered that they had tampered with the Hernici; the ringleaders of the conspiracy, after the consuls, at the instance of the senate, had conducted an investigation, were scourged and beheaded. Nevertheless, that their year might not go by without any war whatever, the consuls made a little expedition into Umbria, because of a report that armed men issuing from a certain cave were making raids upon the farms. The soldiers carried their standards into the cave, and there in the murk received many wounds, particularly from stones that were thrown at them; until, having found the other mouth of the cavern—for there was a way of going through it—they heaped up faggots at both openings and set them afire. In this way about two thousand armed men perished in the cave from the smoke and heat, for they finally rushed into the very flames in their efforts to escape.

LIVY

A.U.C.
451-452

- 7 M. Livio Dentre¹ M. Aemilio² consulibus redintegratum Aequicum bellum. Coloniam aegre patientes velut arcem suis finibus impositam summavi expugnare adorti ab ipsis colonis pelluntur.
- 8 Ceterum tantum Romae terrorem fecere, quia vix credibile erat tam affectis rebus solos per se Aequos ad bellum coortos, ut tumultus eius causa dictator
- 9 diceretur C. Iunius Bubuleus. Cum M. Titinio magistro equitum profectus primo congressu Aequos subegit, ac die octavo triumphans in urbem cum redisset, aedem Salutis, quam consul voverat censor locaverat, dictator dedicavit.

A.U.C.
452

- II. Eodem anno classis Graecorum Cleonymo duce Lacedaemonio ad Italiae litora adpulsa Thurias³ urbem in Sallentinis cepit. Adversus hunc hostem consul Aemilius missus proelio uno fugatum compulit in naves. Thuriae redditae veteri cultori, 3 Sallentinoque agro pax parta. Iunium Bubuleum dictatorem missum in Sallentinos in quibusdam annalibus invenio et Cleonymum, priusquam configendum esset cum Romanis, Italia excessisse.
- 4 Circumvectus inde Brundisii promunturium medioque sinu Hadriatico ventis latus, cum laeva importuosa Italiae litora, dextra Illyrii Liburnique et Histri, gentes ferae et magna ex parte latrociniis

¹ Dentre ζ : dentrice (or -cae) Ω : dentice (PFU (not in O))² M. Aemilio Sigan. (Diod. xx. civi. 1, CIL i², p. 132): à Λ: c (or t) A² ζ: omitted by Ω.³ Thurias ζ : turias D³: thurios (trurios T, turios A) Ω: durior D² L.¹ If Thuriae is what Livy wrote, it must have been an otherwise unknown city in the heel of Italy, where the Sallentini lived.

When Marcus Livius Denter and Marcus Aemilius were consuls, the Aequi resumed hostilities. Indignant that a colony had been established, like a citadel, within their borders, they attacked it with great fury. They were beaten off by the colonists themselves, but occasioned such dismay at Rome—since it was scarce to be believed that the Aequi when in so weakened a condition should have begun a war relying solely on their own resources—that a dictator was appointed to cope with the outbreak, in the person of Gaius Junius Bubulcus. Setting out with Marcus Titinius, his master of the horse, he reduced the Aequi to submission at the first encounter, and having returned in triumph to the City eight days later, dedicated as dictator the temple of Safety which he had vowed as consul and for which as censor he had let the contract.

II. During the same year a Greek fleet commanded by Cleonymus the Lacedaemonian put in to the shores of Italy and seized the city of Thuriae in the country of the Sallentini.¹ The consul Aemilius was dispatched against this enemy, whom he routed in a single engagement and drove to his ships. Thuriae was restored to its old inhabitants, and peace was established in the Sallentine territory. I find in some annals that Junius Bubulcus the dictator was sent among the Sallentini, and that Cleonymus withdrew from Italy before it became necessary to fight the Romans.

Rounding then the promontory of Brundisium, he was swept on by the winds in the mid gulf of the Adriatic, and dreading the harbourless coasts of Italy on his left and on his right the Illyrians, Liburnians, and Histrians,—savage tribes and maritimis infames, terrenter, penitus ad litora Vene-torum pervenit. Expositis paucis qui loca explorarent, cum audisset¹ tenue praetentum litus esse, quod

 transgressis stagna ab tergo sint inrigua aestibus
 maritimis; agros haud procul² capestris cerni;³ 6 ulteriora colles videri; esse ostium fluminis praealti, quo circumagi naves in stationem tutam possint⁴—
 Meduacus amnis erat—: eo invectam classem subire 7 flumine adverso iussit. Gravissimas navium non per-tulit alveus fluminis; in leviora navigia transgressa multitudo armatorum ad frequentes agros, tribus
 maritimis Patavinorum vicis colentibus eam oram, 8 pervenit. Ibi egressi praesidio levi navibus relicto vicis expugnant, inflammant tecta, hominum pecu-dumque praedas agunt et dulcedine praedandi longius
 usque a navibus procedunt.

9 Haec ubi Patavium sunt nuntiata—semper autem eos in armis accolae Galli habebant—in duas partes iuventutem dividunt. Altera⁵ in regionem, qua effusa populatio nuntiabatur, altera, ne cui praedonum
 obvia fieret, alio⁶ itinere ad stationem navium—milia 10 autem quattuordecim ab oppido aberat—ducta. In naves ignaris⁷ custodibus interemptis impetus factus, territique nautae coguntur naves in alteram ripam amnis traicere. Et in terra prosperum aequum in ¹ audisset A² or A⁴ Σ: audissent Ω.

² haud procul Walters and Conway: haud procul proximos (proximus F) Ω: haut proximos A: haud procul agro pax... Salluntinos (repeated from § 3) proximos (omitting agros) O.

³ cerni Σ: cernit Ω.

⁴ possint Walters and Conway: possint vidisse Σ: possent vidisse Madrig: vidisse Ω: vidisset P FUOT².

⁵ altera A² or A⁴: alteram Ω: alterum F.

⁶ alio Gronovius: altero (wanting in O) Ω.

⁷ ignaris Σ: paruis Ω: paruas UΣ: paruas ignaris Σ.

notorious most of them for their piracies—kept B.C. 302 straight on until he reached the coasts of the Veneti. Having sent a small party ashore to explore the country, and learning that it was a narrow beach that extended in front of them, on crossing which one found behind it lagoons which were flooded by the tides; that not far off level fields could be made out, and that hills were seen rising beyond them, and that a river of great depth—the Mediacus—debouched there, into which they could bring round their ships to a safe anchorage—having learned all this, I say, he ordered the fleet to sail in and make its way up stream. But the channel would not admit the heaviest ships, and the multitude of armed men, passing over into the lighter vessels, kept on till they came to thickly inhabited fields; for three maritime villages of the Patavini were situated there along the river-bank. Disembarking there they left a small body of men to defend the boats, burnt the houses, made spoil of men and cattle, and, lured on by the sweets of pillage, advanced to a greater and greater distance from their ships.

When word of these events was brought to the Patavians, whom the vicinity of the Gauls kept always under arms, they divided their young men into two divisions. One of these marched into the region where the scattered marauding was reported; the other, taking a different road, to avoid falling in with any of the marauders, proceeded to the place where the ships were moored, fourteen miles from the town. The latter party, slaying the guards, who were unaware of their approach, made a rush for the ships, and the terrified sailors were forced to get them over to the other side of the stream. On land,

LIVY

c. palatos praedatores proelium fuerat refugientibusque 11 ad stationem Graecis Veneti obsistunt; ita in medio circumventi hostes caesique; pars capti classem
 indicant regemque Cleonymum tria milia abesse.
 12 Inde captivis proximo vico in custodiam datis pars
 fluviatiles naves, ad superanda vada stagnorum apte planis alveis fabricatas, pars captiva navigia armatis compleat profectique ad classem immobiles naves et loca ignota plus quam hostem timentes circumvadunt; 13 fugientesque in altum acrius quam repugnantes
 usque ad ostium amnis persecuti captis quibusdam
 incensisque navibus hostium, quas trepidatio in vada 14 intulerat, victores revertuntur. Cleonymus vix quinta parte navium incolumi, nulla regione maris Hadriatici prospere adita, discessit. Rostra navium spoliaque Laconum in aede Iunonis veteri fixa multi supersunt 15 qui viderunt Patavi. Monumentum navalis pugnae eo die quo pugnatum est quotannis sollemne certamen
 navium in flumine oppidi medio exercetur.

III. Eodem anno Romae cum Vestinis potentibus amicitiam ictum est foedus. Multiplex deinde ex-
 2 ortus terror. Etruriam rebellare ab Arretinorum

¹ For Patavium see Introduction, Vol. I. p. ix f.

too, the battle waged against the straggling ^{B.C. 302} plunderers was equally successful, and when the Greeks would have fled back to their station, the Veneti stood in their way. Thus the enemy were caught between two parties and were cut to pieces. Some of them, being taken prisoners, told how the fleet and King Cleonymus were three miles off. Thereupon the captives were consigned to the next village for safe-keeping, and armed men filling the river boats—suitably constructed with flat bottoms, to enable them to cross the shallow lagoons—and others manning the craft they had captured from the invaders, they descended upon the fleet and surrounded the unwieldy ships; which, being more fearful of the unknown waters than of the enemy, and more bent on escaping to the deep sea than on resisting, they pursued clear to the river's mouth, and having captured some of them and burnt them, after they had been run aground in the confusion, returned victorious. Cleonymus sailed off with barely a fifth part of his ships intact. In no quarter of the Adriatic had his attempts succeeded. There are many now living in Patavium¹ who have seen the beaks of the ships and the spoils of the Laconians which were fastened up in the old temple of Juno. In commemoration of the naval battle a contest of ships is held regularly, on the anniversary of the engagement, in the river that flows through the town.

III. A treaty was entered into at Rome this year with the Vestini, who solicited friendship. Thereafter there were alarms in several quarters. It was reported that Etruria was up in arms, in consequence of an outbreak that had its origin in dissensions at

LIVY

A.U.C.
452

seditionibus motu orto nuntiabatur, ubi Cilnium genus
 praepotens divitiarum invidia pelli armis coeptum;
 simul Marsos agrum vi tueri, in quem colonia Carseoli
 deducta erat quattuor milibus hominum scriptis.
 3 Itaque propter eos tumultus dictus M. Valerius Maximus dictator magistrum equitum sibi legit M.
 4 Aemilium Paulum.—Id magis credo quam Q. Fabium ea aetate atque eis honoribus Valerio subiectum;
 ceterum ex Maximi cognomine ortum errorem haud 5 abnuerim.—Profectus dictator cum exercitu proelio uno Marsos fundit; compulsis deinde in urbes munitas, Milioniam, Plestinam, Fresilium intra dies paucos cepit et parte agri multatis Marsis foedus restituit.
 6 Tum in Etruscos versum bellum; et cum dictator
 auspiciorum repetendorum causa profectus Romam
 esset, magister equitum pabulatum egressus ex insidiis
 circumvenitur signisque aliquot amissis foeda militum 7 caede ac fuga in castra est compulsus.—Qui terronon eo tantum a Fabio abhorret quod, si qua alia
 arte cognomen suum aequavit tum maxime bellicis 8 laudibus, sed etiam quod memor Papirianae saevitiae nunquam ut dictatoris iniussu dimicaret addue-potuisset.

IV. Nuntiata ea clades Romam maiorem quam res-
 2 erat terrorem excivit. Nam ut exercitu deleto ita

¹ Maecenas, the patron of Horace and Virgil, belonged to this family.

² This appears to be a mistake, Carseoli was probably not planted until four years later (chap. xiii. § 1)

³ i.e. that a confusion arose between M. Valerius Maximus and Quintus Fabius Maximus Rullianus.

⁴ See the story of Papirius and Fabius at VIII. xxx-xxxv.

Arretium, where a movement was begun to drive out B.C. 302 the Cilnii—a very powerful family¹—because of the envy occasioned by their wealth. At the same time the Marsi forcibly resisted the confiscation of their land, where the colony of Carseoli had been planted with an enrolment of four thousand men.² In view, therefore, of these tumults, Marcus Valerius Maximus was appointed dictator and named Marcus Aemilius Paulus to be his master of the horse. This I choose rather to believe than that Quintus Fabius, at his time of life and after the offices he had held, was made subordinate to Valerius; but I would not deny that the error might have originated in the surname of Maximus.³—Setting out with his army, the dictator overthrew the Marsi in a single battle; then shutting them up in their walled cities, he captured Milionia, Plestina, and Fresilia, in the course of a few days, and having fined the Marsi in a part of their territory, renewed the treaty with them. The campaign was then directed against the Etruscans; the dictator having set out for Rome, to take the auspices over again, the master of the horse went out to forage, and being ambushed, lost a number of standards and was driven back into his camp, with a shameful rout and slaughter of his soldiers.—This discomfiture is very unlikely to have befallen Fabius, not only because if in any quality he came up to his surname, he assuredly did so in the glory of a soldier, but also because, remembering the severity of Papirius, he could never have been brought to engage in battle without the orders of the dictator.⁴

IV. The news of this reverse gave rise in Rome to a greater alarm than the situation warranted. For, as though the army had been destroyed, a

iustitium indictum, custodiae in portis, vigiliae vicatim 3 exactae, arma tela in muros congesta. Omnibus iunioribus sacramento adactis dictator ad exercitum
 missus omnia spe tranquilliora et composita magistri 4 equitum cura, castra in tutiorem locum redacta, cohortes quae signa amiserant extra vallum sine tentoriis destitutas invenit, exercitum avidum pugnae, 5 quo maturius ignominia aboleretur. Itaque confestim castra inde in agrum Rusellatum promovit.
 6 Eo et hostes secuti, quamquam ex bene gesta re-summam et in aperto certamine virium spem habebant, tamen insidiis quoque, quas feliciter experti 7 erant, hostem temptant. Tecta semiruta vici per vastationem agrorum deusti haud procul castris Romanorum aberant. Ibi abditis armatis pecus in conspectu praesidii Romani, cui praeerat Cn. Fulvius 8 legatus, propulsum. Ad quam inlecebram cum moveretur nemo ab Romana statione, pastorum unus progressus sub ipsas munitiones inclamat alios, cunctanter ab ruinis vici pecus propellentes, quid cessarent cum per media castra Romana tuto agere 9 possent. Haec cum legato Caerites quidam interpretarentur et per omnes manipulos militum indignatio-

¹ By way of punishment for their cowardice. Cf. the punishment meted out to his soldiers in 209 B.C. by Marcellus (xxvii. xiii. 9).

² In Western Etruria, on the river Umbro.

³ The Caerites were citizens (without the suffrage), and as such might serve in the Roman army.

cessation of legal business was proclaimed, guards B.C. 302 were called into service at the gates, and night-watches in the several streets, arms and missiles being heaped upon the walls. After summoning all of military age to take the oath, the dictator was dispatched to the army, and there found everything more tranquil than he had expected and reduced to order by the careful measures of the master of the horse. The camp had been withdrawn to a safer site, the cohorts that had lost their standards had been left outside the rampart without tents,¹ and the army was eager for battle, that it might the sooner wipe out its disgrace. Accordingly he advanced without delay into the district of Rusellae.² To this place the enemy followed him; and although in consequence of their success they had every confidence in their ability to cope with the Romans even in the open field, yet they also attempted an ambuscade, which they had successfully essayed before. Not far from the Roman camp stood the half-ruined buildings of a village which had been burned when the country was laid waste. Concealing armed men in these ruins, they drove out some cattle in full sight of a Roman outpost, which was under the command of the lieutenant Gnaeus Fulvius. But when this tempting bait failed to lure any of the Romans from their post, one of the shepherds came up under the very works and called out to the others, who were hesitating to drive out their flock from amongst the tumble-down buildings, asking why they were so slow, for they could safely drive them through the midst of the Roman camp. Some men from Caere³ interpreted these words to the lieutenant, and great was the indignation aroused ingens esset nec tamen iniussu movere auderent, iubet peritos linguae attendere animum, pastorum 10 sermo agresti an urbano propior esset. Cum refer-rent sonum linguae et corporum habitum et nitorem

 cultiora quam pastoralia esse, "Ite igitur, dicite," inquit, "detegant neququam conditas insidias:
 omnia scire Romanum nec magis iam dolo capi quam 11 armis vinci posse." Haec ubi audita sunt et ad eos qui consederant in insidiis perlata, consurrectum
 repente ex latebris est et in patentem ad conspectum 12 undique campum prolata signa. Visa legato maior acies quam quae ab suo praesidio sustineri posset
 itaque propere ad dictatorem auxilia accitum mittit;
 interea ipse impetus hostium sustinet.

V. Nuntio allato dictator signa ferri ac sequi iubet armatos. Sed celeriora prope omnia imperio erant;
 2 rapta extemplo signa armaque, et vix ab impetu et cursu tenebantur. Cum ira ab accepta nuper clade stimulabat, tum concitatior accidens clamor ab in-3 crescente certamine. Urgent itaque alii alios hor-tanturque signiferos ut ocios eant. Quo magis festinantes videt dictator, eo impensius retentat

through all the maniples of soldiers ; yet they dared B.C. 302 not stir without the orders of their leader, who commanded those familiar with the language to mark whether the shepherds' speech were more like that of rustics or of city-folk. On their reporting that in accent, in carriage, and in complexion they were too refined for shepherds, " Go then," said he, " and bid them uncover the ambuscade they have laid in vain ; for the Romans know all, and can now no more be entrapped than they can be conquered by force of arms." These words were no sooner heard and repeated to those who lay in ambush than they suddenly all rose up from their hiding-places and advanced in martial array into the plain which was spread open to the view on every side. Their army seemed to the lieutenant to be greater than his own detachment could withstand, and he therefore sent in all haste to the dictator to summon help, in the meantime resisting by himself the enemy's charges.

V. On receiving his message the dictator bade advance the standards, and commanded his men to arm and follow them. But everything was almost sooner done than ordered ; standards and arms were hurriedly caught up, and the soldiers could hardly be restrained from pushing forward at a run. It was not anger alone that spurred them on, as they thought of the defeat they had recently sustained, but the shouts, as well, that fell faster on their hearing as the fight waxed more hot. So they urged one another forward and exhorted the standard-bearers to a faster pace. But the more haste the dictator saw them make, the more earnest was he to hold them in, and commanded them to a.u.c. 4 agmen ac sensim incedere iubet. Etrusci contra, 452 principio exciti pugnae, omnibus copiis aderant; et super alios alii nuntiant dictatori omnes legiones Etruscorum capessisse pugnam nec iam ab suis resisti posse, et ipse cernit ex superiore loco in 5 quanto diserimine praesidium esset. Ceterum satis fretus esse etiam nunc tolerando certamini legatum nec se procul abesse periculi vindicem, quam

 maxime volt fatigari hostem, ut integris adoriatur
 6 viribus fessos. Quamquam lente procedunt, iam
 tamen ad impetum capiendum,¹ equiti utique, modicum erat spatium. Prima incedebant signa legionum, ne quid occultum aut repentinum hostis timeret;
 sed reliquerat intervalla inter ordines peditum, qua-7 satis laxo spatio equi permitti possent. Pariter sustulit clamorem acies et emissus eques libero
 cursu in hostem invehitur incompositisque adversus equestrem procellam subitum pavorem offundit.
 8 Itaque, ut prope serum auxilium iam paene circumventis, ita universa requies data est. Integri accepere 9 pugnam, nec ea ipsa² longa aut anceps fuit. Fusi hostes castra repetunt inferentibusque iam signa
 Romanis cedunt et in ultimam castrorum partem

¹ capiendum M: capiendum TDLA: capiunt dum PFU:
wanting in O.

² nec ea ipsa ς (ix. xi. 5): nec a ipsa M: nec ipsa Ω: ex
 ipsa P: nec h^ec ipsa P² or P³: nec hec ipsa O: nec hec ex ipsa U: nec h^ec exposita F.

slow down their march. The Etruscans, on the contrary, having been called out at the beginning of the battle, had taken the field with all their troops. One messenger after another informed the dictator that all the Etruscan legions were engaged and that his own men could hold out no longer; and looking down from the higher ground, he could see for himself the perilous situation of his people. Still, feeling fairly confident that his lieutenant was capable, even then, of maintaining the fight, and that he was himself not too far off to rescue him from danger, he desired the enemy to become completely exhausted, that he might fall upon them with undiminished vigour when their strength was spent. Yet although the Romans advanced but slowly, they had now but a little space to charge in, especially the horse. In the van were the standards of the legions, lest the enemy should be apprehensive of any concealed or rapid movement; but the dictator had left intervals between the files of the infantry, to allow ample room for the horses to go through. The legionaries gave a cheer, and simultaneously the horsemen were let loose and with a free course galloped straight upon the enemy, who were not prepared to resist a shock of cavalry and were overwhelmed with a sudden panic. And so, though the help had nearly come too late for men who were already well-nigh surrounded, yet they were now all given a respite, and the battle was taken over by fresh troops—a battle of no long duration nor of doubtful issue. The routed enemy fled back to their camp, and when the Roman standard-bearers pressed in after them, they gave way and huddled up together in the farthest part

- 10 conglobantur. Haerent fugientes in angustiis portarum; pars magna aggerem vallumque conscendit, si aut ex superiore loco tueri se aut superare aliqua et 11 evadere posset. Forte quodam loco male densatus agger pondere superstantium in fossam procubuit; atque ea, cum deos pandere viam fugae conclamassent, plures inermes quam armati evadunt.
- 12 Hoc proelio fractae iterum Etruscorum vires, et pacto annuo stipendio et duum mensum frumento permissum ab dictatore ut de pace legatos mitterent Romanum. Pax negata, induiae biennii datae.
- 13 Dictator triumphans in urbem rediit.—Habeo autores sine ullo memorabili proelio pacatam ab dictatore Etruriam esse seditionibus tantum Aretinorum compositis et Cilnio¹ genere cum plebe in 14 gratiam reducto.—Consul ex dictatura factus M. Valerius. Non petentem atque adeo etiam absensem creatum tradidere quidam et per interregem ea comitia facta; id unum non ambigitur, consulatum cum Apuleio Pansa gessisse.

VI. M. Valerio et Q. Apuleio consilibus satis
 454 2 pacatae foris res fuere: Etruscum adversae² belli

¹ Cilnio Gruter: licinio iacilnio M: licinio (omitted by F) Ω.

² adversae ς: aduersa Ω: aduersi U.

¹ The other occasion was in 309 B.C. (ix. xxxix. 11).

² This was the fifth consulship of M. Valerius Corvus. The first was 348 B.C. (vii. xxvi. 12). The year 301 B.C., according to the Fasti Consulares, had no consuls but only a dictator. Livy conceives the dictatorship as occupying a part of the year when Livius and Aemilius were consuls (302 B.C.).

of the enclosure. The narrow gates became choked ^{B.C. 302} with fugitives and a great part of them climbed upon the mound and palisade, in hopes that from that elevation they might be able either to defend themselves, or to climb over somewhere and escape. It chanced that in a certain place the mound had not been solidly rammed down, and this, overburdened with the weight of those who stood upon it, slid over into the trench. By that opening—crying out that the gods were providing them a means of flight—they saved themselves, but more got away without their arms than with them.

In this battle the might of the Etruscans was broken for the second time.¹ By promising a year's pay for the soldiers, with two months' corn, they obtained permission from the dictator to send envoys to Rome to negotiate a peace. Peace was denied them, but they were granted a truce of two years. The dictator returned to Rome and triumphed.—I find historians who say that Etruria was pacified by the dictator without any memorable battle, only by settling the dissensions of the Arretini and reconciling the Cilnian family with the plebs.—Marcus Valerius resigned as dictator, to enter immediately upon the consulship.² Some authors have recorded that he was elected without seeking the office, indeed without even being present, and that the election was presided over by an interrex; this only is not disputed, that he held the consulship in company with Apuleius Pansa.

VI. During their year of administration the foreign relations of the state were fairly peaceful: the Etruscans were kept quiet by their failure in res et industiae quietum tenebant ; Samnitem multorum annorum cladibus domitum hauddum foederis novi paenitebat. Romae quoque plebem quietam 3 exonerata¹ in colonias multitudo praestabat. Tamen ne undique tranquillae res essent, certamen iniectum inter primores civitatis, patricios plebeiosque, ab 4 tribunis plebis Q. et Cn. Ogulniis,² qui undique criminandorum patrum apud plebem occasionibus quae sitis, postquam alia frustra temptata erant, eam actionem susceperunt qua non infimam plebem 5 accenderent sed ipsa capita plebis, consulares triumphalesque plebeios, quorum honoribus nihil praeter sacerdotia, quae nondum promiscua erant, 6 deesset. Rogationem ergo promulgarunt ut, cum quattuor augures, quattuor pontifices ea tempestate essent placeretque augeri sacerdotum numerum, quattuor pontifices, quinque augures, de plebe 7 omnes, adlegerentur.—Quemadmodum ad quattuor augurum numerum nisi morte duorum id redigi collegium potuerit, non invenio, cum inter augures constet imparem numerum debere esse, ut tres antiquae tribus, Ramnes Titienses Luceres, suum 8 quaeque augurem habeant aut, si pluribus sit opus, pari inter se numero sacerdotes multiplicent, sicut multiplicati sunt cum ad quattuor quinque adiecti novem numerum, ut terni in singulas essent, expleve-

¹ exonerata Madrig: exhoneratam deducta A: et exon(or-hon-)eratam deducta Ω: et exon(or-hon-)eratam deductam MPFTL.

² Ogulniis ꝝ: Oguiniis Ω: oguinus L: ognimus F.

¹ Weissenborn thinks that Livy has in mind the colonies of a later day whose principal aim was to lighten the City war and by the truce ; the Samnites, tamed by the B.C. 300 defeats of many years, had not wearied as yet of the new covenant. At Rome also the relief afforded by the emigration of large numbers to the colonies had quieted the commons.¹ Nevertheless, that tranquillity might not be found everywhere, the plebeian tribunes Quintus and Gnaeus Ogulnius stirred up a quarrel among the first men of the state, both patrician and plebeian. They had sought in every quarter occasions for maligning the Fathers to the plebs ; and having tried everything else in vain, they set on foot a project by which they might inflame, not the lowest of the rabble, but the very leaders of the plebs—the commoners, namely, who had enjoyed consulships and triumphs, and who lacked nothing but priesthoods, which were not yet open to all, to complete their list of honours. The Ogulnii accordingly proposed a law, that whereas there were then four augurs and four pontiffs and it was desired to augment the number of priests, four pontiffs and five augurs should be added, and should all be taken from the plebs.—How this college could have been reduced to four augurs, unless by the death of two, I cannot discover ; since it is a settled principle amongst the augurs that their number should be uneven, to the end that the three ancient tribes, the Ramnes, Titienses and Luceres, should each have its augur, or else—if a larger number should be needed—that they should increase the priests in the same proportion ; as in fact they were increased when five were added to the four,

 and, making up the number of nine, gave each tribe of its over-population. The colonies actually alluded to were intended primarily to protect the frontiers.

v.c. 9 runt. Ceterum, quia de plebe adlegebantur, iuxta 454 eam rem aegre passi patres quam cum consulatum
 10 volgari viderent. Simulabant ad deos id magis quam ad se pertinere : ipsos visuros ne sacra sua polluantur ; id se optare tantum, ne qua in rem publicam 11 clades veniat. Minus autem tetendere, adsueti iam
 tali¹ genere certaminum vinci ; et cernebant adversarios non, id quod olim vix speraverint, adfectantes magnos honores sed omnia iam in quorum spem dubiam erat certatum adeptos, multiplices consulatus censurasque et triumphos.

VII. Certatum tamen suadenda dissuadendaque lege inter Ap. Claudium maxime ferunt et inter P.
 2 Decium Murem. Qui cum eadem ferme de iure patrum ac plebis quae pro lege Licinia quondam
 contraque eam dicta erant cum plebeiis consulatus
 3 rogabatur disseruissent,² rettulisse dicitur Decius parentis sui speciem, qualem eum multi qui in contione erant viderant, incinctum Gabino cultu super telum stantem, quo se habitu pro populo ac
 4 legionibus Romanis devovisset : tum P. Decium

¹ tali Ω : in tali Harant supported by PF which have in certaminum below).

² disseruissent Σ : disseruisset Ω : deseruisset L.

¹ Livy means that originally there had been three augurs and that each subsequent increase in their number had been by multiples of three. He can only account for the tradition that there were four at this time on the assumption that two had died, and their places had not yet been filled when the Ogulnii made their proposal.

three.¹—But since they were to be added from the B.C. 300 plebs, the patricians were as distressed by the proposal as they had been when they saw the consulship thrown open. They pretended that the gods were more concerned than they themselves were: the gods would see to it that their rites should not be contaminated; for their own part they only hoped that no disaster might come upon the state. They made, however, no great struggle, accustomed as they now were to being worsted in contests of this kind; and they beheld their adversaries no longer reaching out after great honours which they had formerly scarce any hopes of attaining, but in full possession of all the things for which they had striven with dubious prospects of success—repeated consulships, censorships, and triumphs.

VII. There is said, however, to have been a vigorous discussion as to the passage or rejection of the bill, in which Appius Claudius and Publius Decius Mus were the principal speakers. After they had brought up nearly the same arguments concerning the rights of patricians and plebeians as had formerly been employed in behalf of and against the Licinian Law,² when the plebeians sought access to the consulship, it is related that Decius evoked the image of his father as he had been seen by many who were then present in the assembly, wearing his toga with the Gabine cineture,³ and standing over his weapon, as he had done when offering himself a sacrifice for the Roman People and the legions. Publius Decius the consul had

¹ Enacted 367 B.C. (VI. xxxv. 5).

² Prescribed in the ceremony of devotion, as in certain others.

consulem purum piumque deis immortalibus visum aeque ac si T. Manlius collega eius devoveretur :
 5 eundem P. Decium qui sacra publica populi Romani faceret legi rite non potuisse ? Id esse periculum, ne suas preces minus audirent di quam Ap. Claudi ?
 Castius eum sacra privata facere et religiosius deos
 6 colere quam se ? Quem paenitere votorum quae pro re publica nuncupaverint tot consules plebeii, tot dictatores, aut ad exercitus eentes aut inter ipsa 7 bella ? Numerarentur duces eorum annorum, qui bus plebeiorum ductu et auspicio res geri coeptae
 sint ;¹ numerarentur triumphi : iam ne nobilitatis 8 quidem suae plebeios paenitere. Pro certo habere, si quod repens bellum oriatur non plus spei fore senatui populoque Romano in patriciis quam in plebeiis ducibus.

9 “Quod cum ita se habeat, cui deorum hominumve
 indignum videri potest” inquit, “eos viros, quos vos sellis curulibus, toga praetexta, tunica palmata et toga picta et corona triumphali laureaque honoraritis, quorum domos spoliis hostium adfixis insignes inter
 alias feceritis, pontificalia atque auguralia insignia

¹ coeptae sint Duker: coeptae sunt Ω: coepcta sunt F:
 c^epte sunt O: cepte § A: coactae sunt L.

The toga praetexta (white with purple border) was worn by those who had been elected to curule magistracies; the tunica palmata (embroidered with palm-leaves) and the toga picta (of purple embroidered with gold) were worn by the triumphator, who was also adorned with a wreath of laurel, while a public slave who stood beside him in the chariot held a golden chaplet over his head.

on that occasion seemed to the immortal gods an ^{B.C. 300} oblation no less pure and holy than if his colleague Titus Manlius had been offered up; could not then this same Publius Decius—he asked—have been duly chosen to solemnize the public sacrifices of the Roman People? Or was it to be feared that the gods would hearken less readily to the speaker's prayers than to those of Appius Claudius? Did Appius perform with more devotion the rites of domestic religion, and worship the gods more scrupulously than he did himself? Who was there that repented him of the vows that had been uttered in the state's behalf by so many plebeian consuls and so many dictators, either on going to their armies or in the midst of their campaigns? Let them enumerate the generals of those years that had elapsed since campaigns were first conducted under the leadership and auspices of plebeians; let them enumerate the triumphs; even on the score of their nobility, the plebeians had now nothing to regret. He felt quite sure that if suddenly some war should arise, the senate and the Roman People would rest their hopes no more on patrician than on plebeian generals.

“Since this is so,” he proceeded, “what god or man can deem it inappropriate that those heroes whom you have honoured with curule chairs, with the purple-bordered robe, with the tunic adorned with palms, and with the embroidered toga, the triumphal crown and the laurel wreath,¹ whose houses you have made conspicuous amongst the rest with the spoils of your enemies which you have fastened to their walls,—who, I say, can object if such men add thereto the insignia of the pontiffs

A.U.C. 10 adicere? Qui Iovis optimi maximi ornatu decoratus 454 curru aurato per urbem vectus in Capitolium ascenderit, is non¹ conspiciatur cum capide ac lituo, cum²
 capite velato victimam caedet auguriumve ex arce 11 capiet? Cuius in imaginis³ titulo consulatus censuraque et triumphus aequo animo legetur, si auguratum aut pontificatum adieceritis, non sustinebunt legen-12 tium oculi? Evidem—pace dixerim deum—eos nos iam populi Romani beneficio esse spero, qui sacerdotiis
 non minus reddamus dignatione nostra honoris⁴
 quam acceperimus et deorum magis quam nostra
 causa expetamus ut quos privatim colimus publice colamus.

VIII. Quid autem ego sic adhuc egi, tamquam integra sit causa patriciorum de sacerdotiis et non iam in possessione unius amplissimi simus sacerdotii?
 2 Decemviros sacris faciundis, carminum Sibyllae ac
 fatorum populi huius interpretes, antistites eosdem
 Apollinaris sacri caerimoniarumque aliarum plebeios
 3 videmus. Nec aut tum patriciis ulla iniuria facta est, cum duumviris sacris faciundis adiectus est
 propter plebeios numerus, et nunc tribunus, vir-

¹ is non Weissenborn: is Ω.

² cum capide ac lituo, cum Walters: cum capide ac lituo γ: cum li capide ac tuo Μ: cum lituo PFO² (or T¹): cum litua Λ: cum TDLA.

³ in imaginis Weisenberg: imaginis (sic) A: imaginis Ω.

⁴ honoris D^x: honores Ω.

¹ The capis, according to Varro (L.L., v. 121), got its name from capere, because it was provided with a handle; it was used in the ceremonial of the pontiffs. The lituus was used and the augurs? May the man who, decked with ^{B.C. 300} the robes of Jupiter Optimus Maximus, has been borne through the City in a gilded chariot and has mounted the Capitol—may that man not be seen with chalice and crook,¹ when, covering his head, he offers up the victim, or receives an augury from the Citadel? If men shall read with equanimity, in the inscription that accompanies his portrait, of consulship, censorship, and triumph, will their eyes be unable to endure the brightness, if you add to these the augurate or pontificate? For my own part—under Heaven's favour be it spoken—I trust that we are now, thanks to the Roman People, in a position to reflect upon the priesthoods—in consequence of our recognized fitness for office—no less credit than we shall receive from them, and to seek, more for the service of the gods than for ourselves, that those whom we worship privately we may also worship in the name of the state.

VIII. “But why have I been reasoning hitherto as if the patrician claim on the priesthoods were intact, and we were not already in possession of the one supremely honourable priesthood? We see that plebeians are members of the Ten charged with the sacred rites, interpreters of the Sibylline oracles and the destinies of this people, the same being also overseers of Apollo's ritual and of other ceremonies.
And yet the patricians were in no way wronged at the time when the two commissioners in charge of sacred rites were increased in number on account of the plebeians; and our brave and vigorous tribune, in proposing at the present time to by the augur; Livy says (I. xviii. 7) that it was a crooked staff without a knot.

A.V.C.
454

fortis ac strenuus, quinque augurum loca, quattuor 4 pontificum adicit,¹ in quae plebeii nominentur, non ut vos, Appi, vestro loco pellant sed ut adiuvent vos homines plebeii divinis quoque rebus procurandis,
 sicut in ceteris humanis pro parte virili adiuvant.
 5 Noli erubescere, Appi, collegam in sacerdotio habere
 quem in censura quem in consulatu collegam habere
 potuisti, cuius tam dictatoris magister equitum quam 6 magistri equitum dictator esse potes. Sabinum advenam, principem nobilitatis² vestrae, seu Attium³ Clausum seu Ap. Claudium mavoltis, illi antiqui patricii in suum numerum acceperunt: tu ne⁴
 fastidieris nos in sacerdotum numerum accipere.
 7 Multa nobiscum decora adferimus, immo omnia
 8 eadem quae vos superbos fecerunt: L. Sextius primus de plebe consul est factus, C. Licinius Stolo primus magister equitum, C. Marcius Rutulus⁵ primus et dictator et censor, Q. Publilius Philo 9 primus praetor. Semper ista audita sunt eadem, penes vos auspicia esse, vos solos gentem habere, vos
 solos iustum imperium et auspicium domi militiae-10 que; aeque adhuc prosperum plebeium et patricium fuit porroque erit. En umquam fando audistis patricios primo esse factos non de caelo demissos sed
 qui patrem ciere possent, id est nihil ultra quam 11 ingenuos? Consulem iam patrem ciere possum,

¹ adicit Duker: adicet A² (or A³): adiecit Ω .² nobilitatis A¹ (or A²) ζ : nobilitati Ω .³ Attium Alschejski (II. xvi. 4): at (or ac-)ium MPFUO:
app tum TDLA.⁴ tu ne Siesbye: ne Ω .⁵ Rutulus Conway and Walters on III. vii. 6: rutilius (or
-cil-) Ω . The same correction at chap. ix. § 2.

add five augurs' places and four pontiffs', to which ^{B.C. 300} plebeians may be named, has not desired to oust you patricians, Appius, from your places, but that men of the plebs may help you in the administration also of divine affairs, even as they help you in other and human matters, to the measure of their strength. Blush not, Appius, to have a colleague in the priesthood whom you might have had in the censorship or consulship. It is quite as possible that he should be dictator and you his master of the horse as that it should be the other way about. A Sabine immigrant, the first of your house to be ennobled—call him Attius Clausus or Appius Claudius, as you will—was admitted to their number by the patricians of that olden time: be not too proud to admit us into the number of the priests. We bring many distinctions with us, aye, every one of those same distinctions that have made you so high and mighty. Lucius Sextius was the first plebeian consul, Gaius Licinius Stolo the first master of the horse; Gaius Marcius Rutulus the first dictator and censor, Quintus Publilius Philo the first praetor. From you we have heard always the same song—that the auspices belong to you, that you alone are of noble birth, that you alone have the full imperium and right to divination, both at home and in the field. But the authority and divination of plebeian and patrician have prospered in equal measure until now, and so they shall do in the future. Pray, has it ever been wafted to your ears that those who were first appointed to be patricians were not beings descended from celestial regions, but were such as could name their fathers—were free-born men, that is, and nothing more? I can already name a consul for avumque iam poterit filius meus. Nihil est aliud in re, Quirites, nisi ut omnia negata adipiscamur;

A.U.C.
454

certamen tantum patricii petunt nec curant quem 12 eventum certaminum habeant. Ego hanc legem, quod bonum faustum felique sit vobis ac rei publicae, uti rogas, iubendam¹ censeo."

A.U.C.
455

IX. Vocare tribus extemplo populus iubebat, apparebatque accipi legem; ille tamen dies inter-2 cessione est sublatus. Postero die deterritis tribunis ingenti consensu accepta est. Pontifices creantur
suasor legis P. Decius Mus P. Sempronius Sophus
C. Marcius Rutulus M. Livius Denter; quinque
augures item de plebe, C. Genucius P. Aelius Paetus
M. Minucius Faesus C. Marcius T. Publilius. Ita
octo pontificum, novem augurum numerus factus.

3 Eodem anno M. Valerius consul de provocatione legem tulit diligentius sanctam. Tertio ea tum post reges exactos lata est, semper a familia eadem.
4 Causam renovandae saepius haud aliam fuisse reor
quam quod plus paucorum opes quam libertas plebis poterat. Porcia tamen lex sola pro tergo civium lata videtur, quod gravi poena, si quis verberasset
5 necessetve civem Romanum, sanxit; Valeria lex cum

¹ iubendam Σ : subendam Σ : subeundam Ω.

¹ For the earlier laws de provocatione, see II. viii. 2, and
III. lv. 4.

² This law was not passed until (probably) 198 B.C., at the instance of the elder Cato, who was then praetor.

my father, and my son will presently be able to ^{B.C. 300} name one for his grandfather. In truth the matter is simply, Quirites, that we must always be first denied, and yet have our way in the end. A struggle is all that the patricians ask: they care not what may be the outcome of the struggle. I hold that this law—and may good come of it and favour and prosperity, to yourselves and to the state!—should be ordered, as proposed."

IX. The people straightway commanded the tribes ^{B.C. 299} to be called, and it seemed that the measure would be accepted; nevertheless it was put off for that day on account of a veto. On the following day the tribunes were cowed and the law was passed with acclamation. To be pontiffs were chosen the advocate of the law, Publius Decius Mus, with Publius Sempronius Sophus, Gaius Marcius Rutulus, and Marcus Livius Denter; the five augurs were likewise of the plebs, Gaius Genucius, Publius Aelius Paetus, Marcus Minucius Faesus, Gaius Marcius, and Titus Publilius. Thus the number of pontiffs became eight and of augurs nine.

In the same year Marcus Valerius the consul proposed a law of appeal with stricter sanctions. This was the third time since the expulsion of the kings that such a law had been introduced, by the same family in every instance.¹ The reason for renewing it more than once was, I think, simply this, that the wealth of a few carried more power than the liberty of the plebs. Yet the Porcian law alone seems to have been passed to protect the persons of the citizens, imposing, as it did, a heavy penalty if anyone should scourge or put to death a Roman citizen.² The Valerian law, having forbidden that

eum qui provocasset virgis caedi securique necari vetuisset, si quis adversus ea fecisset, nihil ultra quam "improbe factum" adiecit. Id, qui tum pudor hominum erat, visum, credo, vinculum satis
 validum legis: nunc vix serio¹ ita minetur quisquam.

Bellum ab eodem consule haudquaquam memorabile
 adversus rebellantes Aequos, cum praeter animos feroce nihil ex antiqua fortuna haberent, gestum est. Alter consul Apuleius in Umbria Nequinum oppidum circumscendit. Locus erat arduus atque in parte una praecipus, ubi nunc Narnia sita
 est, nec vi nec munimento capi poterat. Itaque eam infectam rem M. Fulvius Paetus T. Manlius Torquatus novi consules acceperunt.

In eum annum cum Q. Fabium consulem non petentem omnes dicerent centuriae, ipsum auctorem fuisse Macer Licinius ac Tubero tradunt differendi sibi consulatus in bellicosiore annum: eo anno maiori se usui rei publicae fore urbano gesto magistratu.
 Ita nec dissimulantem quid mallet nec
 petentem tamen, aedilem curulem cum L. Papirio Cursore factum. Id ne pro certo ponerem vetustior annalium auctor Piso efficit, qui eo anno aediles curules fuisse tradit Cn. Domitium² Cn. filium Calvi-

¹ vix serio ς Pithoeus, Perizonius: uix seruo OTIA²: uix
 seru (or other corruptions) Ω .

² Cn. Domitium Pighius (C.I.L. i², p. 134) : CI (or cl or C.L. or C.L.) Domitium Ω : i.e. domitium T.

¹ The Acta Triumphorum (C.I.L., i², p. 171) give him as son of Gnaeus and grandson of Gnaeus; he is therefore not the same as the M. Fulvius who was consul in 305 B.C. (IX.
 xliv. 15), whose father and grandfather were both named Lucius.

² Fabius had already held this office, 331 B.C. (VIII.
 xviii. 4).

he who had appealed should be scourged with rods B.C. 209 or beheaded, merely provided that if anyone should disregard these injunctions it should be deemed a wicked act. This seemed, I suppose, a sufficiently strong sanction of the law, so modest were men in those days; at the present time one would hardly utter such a threat in earnest.

The same consul conducted an insignificant campaign against the rebellious Aequi, who retained nothing of their ancient fortune but a warlike spirit. Apuleius, the other consul, laid siege to the town of Nequinum in Umbria. It was a steep place and on one side precipitous—the site is now occupied by Narnia—and could be captured neither by assault nor by siege operations. The enterprise was therefore still unfinished when Marcus Fulvius Paetus¹ and Titus Manlius Torquatus, the new consuls, took it over.

Licinius Macer and Tubero declare that all the centuries were for naming Quintus Fabius consul for this year, though he was not a candidate, but that Fabius himself urged them to defer his consulship to a year when there was more fighting; just then he would be of greater service to the state if invested with an urban magistracy. And so, neither dissembling what he had in mind nor yet seeking it, he was elected curule aedile, with Lucius Papirius Cursor.² I have been unable to put this down for certain, because Piso, one of the older annalists,³ states that the curule aediles for that year were Gnaeus Domitius Calvinus, the son of ³ For Piso and the other annalists see Vol. I. pp. xxviii-xxx.

A.U.C. 13 num et Sp. Carvilium Q. filium Maximum. Id credo
 455 cognomen errorem in aedilibus fecisse secutamque fabulam mixtam ex aediliciis et consularibus comitiis, 14 convenientem errori. Et lustrum eo anno conditum a P. Sempronio Sopho¹ et P. Sulpicio Saverrione censoribus, tribusque additae duae, Aniensis ac Terentina.² Haec Romae gesta.

X. Ceterum ad Nequinum oppidum cum segni obsidione tempus tereretur, duo ex oppidanis, quorum erant aedificia iuncta muro, specu facto ad stationes 2 Romanas itinere occulto perveniant; inde ad consulem deducti praesidium armatum se intra moenia 3 et muros accepturos confirmant. Nec aspernanda res visa neque incaute credenda. Cum altero eorum —nam alter obses retentus—duo exploratores per 4 cuniculum missi; per quos satis comperta re trecenti armati transfuga duce in urbem ingressi nocte portam quae proxima erat cepere. Qua refracta consul 5 exercitusque Romanus sine certamine urbem invaseret. Ita Nequinum in dicionem populi Romani venit. Colonia eo adversus Umbros missa a Nare flumine³ Narnia appellata; exercitus cum magna praeda Romam reductus.

6 Eodem anno ab Etruseis adversus indutias paratum bellum; sed eos talia⁴ molientis Gallorum ingens

¹ P. Sempronio Sopho et edd (from § 2): P. Sulpicio Sopho et MTDLA: omitted by PFUO!.

² Terentina Ω: tarentina TDLA: terentia Periocha: Teretina Mommsen (cf. Conway, Italic Dialects, i, p. 340).

³ Nare flumine ζ: flumine Ω.

⁴ talia Glareanus: alia Ω.

¹ The “closing of the lustrum” was accomplished by the sacrifice of a swine, a sheep and an ox (the suovetaurilia), and completed the ceremonies incidental to the census.

Gnaeus, and Spurius Carvilius Maximus, the son of B.C. 299 Quintus. I fancy that this surname occasioned an error in regard to the aediles, and that a story afterwards grew up in harmony with the error, from a confusion of the aedilician with the consular elections. This year witnessed also the closing of the lustrum,¹ by the censors Publius Sempronius Sophus and Publius Sulpicius Saverio, and two tribes were added—the Aniensis and the Terentina. So much for affairs at Rome.

X. Meantime, at the town of Nequinum, while the siege dragged slowly on, two of the townsmen, whose dwellings abutted on the wall, dug a tunnel and made their way in secret to the Roman outposts. Thence they were conducted to the consul, whom they assured of their readiness to admit a party of soldiers within the fortifications and the walls. It was not thought wise to spurn this offer, nor yet rashly to confide in it. In company with one of these men—the other being held as a hostage—two scouts were sent through the tunnel; the result of their investigation was satisfactory, and three hundred armed men, with the renegade as guide, effected an entrance by night into the city and seized the nearest gate. Once this had been broken down, the Roman consul and his army captured the place without a struggle. Thus Nequinum came under the sway of the Roman People. A colony was sent there to make head against the Umbrians, and was given the name of Narnia from the river Nar. The army, enriched with spoil, marched back to Rome.

The Etruscans planned to go to war that year in violation of the truce; but while they were busy exercitus finis ingressus paulisper a proposito avertit.

 7 Pecunia deinde, qua multum poterant, freti, socios
 ex hostibus facere Gallos conantur ut eo adiuncto 8 exercitu cum Romanis bellarent. De societate haud abnuunt barbari: de mercede agitur. Qua pacta acceptaque cum parata cetera ad bellum essent
 sequique Etruscus iuberet, infitias eunt mercedem 9 se belli Romanis inferendi pactos: quidquid acce-perint accepisse ne agrum Etruscum vastarent armis-10 que lacerrent cultores; militaturos tamen se, si
 utique Etrusci velint, sed nulla alia mercede quam
 ut in partem agri accipiantur tandemque aliqua sede
 11 certa consistant. Multa de eo concilia populorum Etruriae habita, nec perfici quiequam potuit, non tam quia imminui agrum quam quia aceolas sibi
 quisque adiungere tam efferatae gentis homines 12 horrebat. Ita dimissi Galli pecuniam ingentem sine labore ac periculo partam¹ rettulerunt. Romae terrorem praebuit fama Galliei tumultus ad bellum Etruscum adiecti; eo minus cunctanter foedus ictum cum Picenti populo est.

XI. T. Manlio consuli provincia Etruria sorte evenit; qui vixdum ingressus hostium finis cum

¹ partam ζ: paratam Ω.

¹ Now mentioned for the first time by Livy.

with this project an enormous army of Gauls invaded their borders and diverted them for a little while from their purpose. Afterwards, putting their trust in money, of which they had great store, they endeavoured to convert the Gauls from enemies into friends, to the end that, uniting the Gallic army with their own, they might fight the Romans. The barbarians made no objection to an alliance: it was only a question of price. When this had been agreed upon and received, and the Etruscans, having completed the rest of their preparations for the war, bade their new allies follow them, the Gauls demurred. They had made no bargain, they said, for a war with Rome; whatever they had received had been in consideration of their not devastating the Etruscan territory and molesting its inhabitants; nevertheless they would take the field, if the Etruscans were bent on having them, but on one condition only—that the Etruscans admit them to a share in their land, where they might settle at last in a permanent home. Many councils of the peoples of Etruria were held to consider this offer, but nothing could be resolved upon, not so much from a reluctance to see their territory lessened as because everyone shrank from having men of so savage a race for neighbours. So the Gauls were dismissed, and departed with a vast sum of money, acquired without any toil or risk. The Romans were alarmed by the rumour of a Gallic rising in addition to a war with the Etruscans, and lost no time in concluding a treaty with the people of Picenum.¹

XI. The command in Etruria fell by lot to Titus Manlius the consul. He had barely entered the exerceretur inter equites, ab rapido cursu circumambulando equo effusus extemplo prope exspiravit; ter-2 tius ab eo casu dies finis vitae consuli fuit. Quo velut omne bellum accepto deos pro se commisisse

 3 bellum memorantes Etrusei sustulere animos. Romae cum desiderio viri tum incommoditate temporis tristis nuntius fuit; patres ab iubendo dictatore consulis subrogandi comitia ex sententia principum 4 habita deterruerunt.¹ M. Valerium consulem omnes centuriae² dixerunt, quem senatus dictatorem dici iussurus fuerat. Tum extemplo in Etruriam ad
 5 legiones proficisci iussit. Adventus eius compressit Etruscos adeo ut nemo extra munimenta egredi
 auderet timorque ipsorum obsidioni similis esset.
 6 Neque illos novus consul vastandis agris urendisque
 tectis, cum passim non villaes solum sed frequentes quoque vici incendiis fumarent, elicere ad certamen potuit.

7 Cum hoc segnius bellum opinione esset, alterius
 belli, quod multis in vicem cladibus haud immerito terribile erat, fama, Picentium novorum sociorum
 indicio exorta est: Samnites arma et rebellionem 8 spectare seque ab iis sollicitatos esse. Picentibus gratiae actae et magna pars curae patribus ab Etruria
 in Samnites versa est.

¹ patres . . . deterruerunt Gronovius: ut patres . . . delirruerint Ω.

² centuriae Cobet: sententiae centuriaeque Ω.

territory of the enemy, and was exercising with the ^{B.C. 298} cavalry, when, in wheeling his horse about after a swift gallop, he was thrown and ere long breathed his last, for the third day following the accident saw the end of the consul's life. Taking this as an omen of the war, and declaring that the gods had begun hostilities in their behalf, the Etruscans plucked up courage. It was sad news to the Romans; not only could they ill spare the man, but his death occurred at an embarrassing moment. The Fathers would have ordered the nomination of a dictator had not the election held to choose a substitute for the consul fallen out in accordance with the wishes of the leaders. Marcus Valerius was the choice of all the centuries for consul. It was he whom the senate had intended to have named as dictator, and they now commanded him to proceed forthwith to the legions in Etruria. His arrival so damped the ardour of the Etruscans that none ventured outside their fortifications, and their own fear was like a besieging host. Nor could the new consul entice them into giving battle by wasting their lands and firing their buildings, though the smoke was rising on every side from the conflagration not only of farm-houses but of many villages as well.

While this war was prolonged beyond anticipation, another war—justly dreaded by reason of the many losses which the parties to it had inflicted on each other—was beginning to be talked of in consequence of information given by the Picentes, Rome's new allies. The Samnites, they said, were looking to arms and a renewal of hostilities, and had solicited their help. The Picentes were thanked, and the senate's anxiety was diverted, in great measure, from Etruria to the Samnites.

A.U.C. 9 Caritas etiam annonae sollicitam civitatem habait 456 ventumque ad inopiae ultimum foret, ut scripsere quibus aedilem fuisse eo anno Fabium Maximum placet, ni eius viri cura, qualis in bellicis rebus multis tempestatibus fuerat, talis domi tum in annonae dispensatione praeparando ac convehendo frumento fuisset.

10 Eo anno—nec traditur causa—interregnū initum.
 interreges fuere Ap. Claudius, dein P. Sulpicius. Is comitia consularia habuit; creavit L. Cornelium Scipionem, Cn. Fulvium consules.

11 Principio huius anni oratores Lucanorum ad novos
 consules venerunt questum, quia condicionibus
 perlicere se nequierint ad societatem armorum,
 Samnites infesto exercitu ingressos fines suos vastare

12 belloque ad bellum cogere. Lucano populo satis
 superque erratum quondam nunc ita obstinatos animos esse: ut omnia ferre ac pati tolerabilius
 ducant, quam ut unquam postea nomen Romanum

13 violent. Orare patres ut et Lucanos in fidem accipient et vim atque iniuriam ab se Samnitium
 arceant: se, quamquam bello cum Samnitibus suscepto necessaria iam facta adversus Romanos
 fides sit, tamen obsides dare paratos esse.

XII. Brevis consultatio senatus fuit; ad unum omnes iungendum foedus cum Lucanis resque

¹ This is said to be the first recorded instance of the aediles being charged with the oversight of the City's food-supply.

² The Lucanians had entered upon friendly relations with the Romans in 326 B.C. (viii. xxv. 3), but had been seduced from their loyalty by the Samnites (viii. xxvii. 10). A Roman army invaded them in 317 (ix. xx. 9).

The citizens were also concerned at the dearness ^{B.C. 298} of provisions, and would have experienced the direst need, as those writers have recorded who are pleased to represent Fabius Maximus as having been aedile in that year, if that heroic man, who had on many occasions managed military undertakings, had not at this juncture shown himself equally expert in the administration of the market and the purchase and importation of corn.¹

In this year—for no cause assigned—there befell an interregnum. The interreges were Appius Claudius, and afterwards Publius Sulpicius. The latter held a consular election, and announced that the choice had fallen on Lucius Cornelius Scipio and Gnaeus Fulvius.

In the beginning of this year Lucanian envoys came to the new consuls to complain that the Samnites, since they had been unable by offering inducements to entice them into an armed alliance, had invaded their territories with a hostile army and by warring on them were obliging them to go to war. The people of Lucania, they said, had on a former occasion strayed all too far from the path of duty, but were now so resolute as to deem it better to endure and suffer anything than ever again to offend the Romans.² They besought the Fathers both to take the Lucanians under their protection and to defend them from the violence and oppression of the Samnites. Though their having gone to war with the Etruscans was necessarily a pledge of loyalty to the Romans, yet they were none the less ready to give hostages.

XII. Discussion in the senate was soon over. Every opinion was for entering into a treaty with

A.U.C.
456

2 repetendas ab Samnitibus censem. Benigne responsum Lucanis iustumque foedus; fetiales missi, qui Samnitem decedere agro sociorum ac deducere exercitum finibus Lucanis iuberent; quibus obviam missi ab Samnitibus, qui denuntiarent, si quod adissent in 3 Samnio concilium, haud inviolatos abituros. Haec postquam audita sunt Romae, bellum Samnitibus et patres censuerunt et populus iussit.

Consules inter se provincias partiti sunt: Scipioni Etruria, Fulvio Samnites obvenerunt, diversique ad
 4 suum quisque bellum proficieuntur. Scipioni segne bellum et simile prioris anni militiae exspectanti hostes ad Volaterras instructo agmine occurrerunt.
 5 Pugnatum maiore parte diei magna utrumque caede; nox incertis qua data victoria esset intervenit. Lux insequens victorem victumque ostendit; nam Etrusei
 6 silentio noctis castra reliquerant.¹ Romanus egressus in aciem, ubi profectio hostium concessam victoriam videt, progressus ad castra vacuis cum plurima praeda—nam et stativa et trepide deserta fuerant—
 7 potitur. Inde in Faliscum agrum copiis reductis cum impedimenta Faleriis cum modico praesidio

¹ reliquerant Hensinger: reliquerunt Ω.

¹ This was the so-called Third Samnite War.

² The phrase instructo agmine seems to be used of a column formed for marching in such a way that the soldiers merely

Lucania and demanding satisfaction of the Samnites. B.C. 298
 The Lucanians received a friendly answer, and the league was formed. Fetials were then sent to command the Samnites to leave the country belonging to Rome's allies, and withdraw their army from the territory of Lucania. They were met on the way by messengers, whom the Samnites had dispatched to warn them that if they went before any Samnite council they would not depart unscathed. When these things were known at Rome, the senate advised and the people voted a declaration of war against the Samnites.¹

The consuls divided the commands between them, Scipio getting Etruria and Fulvius the Samnites, and set out for their respective wars. Scipio looked forward to a slow campaign like that of the previous year, but was met near Volaterrae by the enemy drawn up in column.² The fighting, which lasted for the best part of a day, was attended with heavy losses on both sides; and night came on while it was yet uncertain to which nation victory had been vouchsafed. The morning showed who was victor and who vanquished, for in the silence of the night the Etruscans had decamped. The Romans marched out into line of battle; and when they saw that the enemy by his retreat had conceded their superiority, they advanced and possessed themselves of the camp, which was unoccupied and contained much booty, for it had been a permanent post and had been hurriedly abandoned. Scipio then led his troops back into the Faliscan territory, and having left his baggage with a small guard in Falerii, set out with by executing a right (or left) face would constitute a battle-line.

A.U.C.
456

reliquisset, expedito agmine ad populandos¹ hostium 8 fines incedit. Omnia ferro ignique vastantur; praedae undique actae. Nec solum modo vastum hosti relitum sed castellis etiam vicisque inlatus ignis: urbibus oppugnandis temperatum, in quas timor Etruscos compulerat.

9 Cn. Fulvi consulis clara pugna in Samnio ad
 Bovianum haudquaquam ambiguæ victoriae fuit.
 Bovianum inde adgressus nec ita multo post Aufidenam vi cepit.

XIII. Eodem anno Carseolos colonia in agrum
 2 Aequicolorum deducta. Fulvius consul de Samnitibus triumphavit. Cum comitia consularia instantent, fama exorta Etruscos Samnitesque ingentes conscribere
 3 exercitus: palam omnibus conciliis vexari principes Etruscorum, quod non Gallos quacumque condicione traxerint ad bellum; increpari² magistratus Samni-tium, quod exercitum adversus Lucanum hostem 4 comparatum obiecerint Romanis; itaque suis sociorumque viribus consurgere hostes ad bellum, et haudquaquam pari defungendum esse certamine.

5 Hic terror, cum illustres viri consulatum peterent, omnes in Q. Fabium Maximum primo non petentem, deinde, ut inclinata studia vidi, etiam recusantem
 6 convertit: quid se iam senem ac perfunctum laboribus

¹ populandos *MPUOA*²: depopulandos FTDLA.

² increpari σ: increpare Ω.

¹ We had already been told of the colony at Carseoli in chap. iii. § 2. Livy seems here to be following a different authority, and perhaps a better one, as the town is here correctly located among the Aequicoli (mentioned in I. xxxii. 5 as an ancient tribe from whom Ancus Marcius copied the ritual of the fetials instead of among the Marsi).

his army in light marching order to ravage the ^{B.C. 298} territory of the enemy. The whole country was laid waste with fire and sword and booty was brought in from all directions. Not only was the soil left bare for the enemy, but even strongholds and villages were burned. The consul stopped short of attacking the walled towns, into which the frightened Etruscans had fled for refuge.

The other consul, Gnaeus Fulvius, fought a famous battle in Samnium, near Bovianum, and gained a victory that was by no means doubtful. He then attacked and captured Bovianum, and not long afterwards Aufidena.

XIII. A colony was founded in that same year at Carseoli in the land of the Aequicoli.¹ The consul Fulvius triumphed over the Samnites. As the consular elections drew near, a rumour arose that the Etruscans and the Samnites were levying huge forces; it was said that in all their councils the leaders of the Etruscans were openly censured for not having brought the Gauls into the war, on whatever terms; and the Samnite magistrates were attacked for having confronted the Romans with an army raised to oppose a Lucanian foe; thus their enemies were girding themselves for war, in their own might and the might of their allies, and they would have to contend with them on far from even terms.

This danger, though illustrious men were candidates for the consulship, made everyone turn to Quintus Fabius Maximus, who was not a candidate, in the first place, and who, when he saw the direction of the people's wishes, actually refused to stand. Why must they trouble him, he asked, laborumque praemiis sollicitarent? Nec corporis nec animi vigorem remanere eundem, et fortunam ipsam vereri, ne cui deorum nimia iam in se et constantior quam velint humanae res videatur. Et se gloriae seniorum succrevisse et ad suam gloriam consurgentes alios laetum aspicere; nec honores magnos fortissimis viris Romae nec honoribus deesse fortes viros.

8 Acuebat hac moderatione tam iusta studia; quae verecundia legum restinguenda ratus, legem recitari iussit qua intra decem annos eundem consulem refici non liceret. Vix p[ro]sternitur audita lex est tribunique plebis nihil id impedimenti futurum aiebant:

10 se ad populum laturos uti legibus solveretur. Et ille quidem in recusando perstabat: quid ergo attineret leges ferri,¹ quibus per eosdem qui tulissent fraus fieret. Iam regi leges, non regere. Populus² nihilo minus suffragia inibat, et ut quaeque intro vocata erat centuria, consulem haud dubie Fabium dicebat.

12 Tum demum consensu civitatis victus, "Dei approbent" inquit, "quod agitis acturique estis, Quirites. Ceterum, quoniam in me quod vos voltis facturi estis, in collega sit meae apud vos gratiae locus:

¹ ferri Walters: ferri ros(or-rof-)itans M: ferri cogitans O: ferri rogitanus (in PFU rogitanus comes after quibus) Ω.

² populus A²: populos Ω (uncertain which letter in O).

¹ The statute dated from 342 B.C. and applied equally to all magistracies, but was frequently disregarded. As Fabius had not been consul since 308, his election now would not have contravened the statute, and Luterbacher suggests that the story may have originated in connexion with the election of two years before (chap. ix. § 10).

² There was an enclosure (the saepta) in the Campus Martius, into which the centuries were summoned, and there, one by one, proclaimed their choice.

who was an old man now and had done with ^{B.C. 298} toil and the rewards of toil? Neither his body nor his mind retained their vigour undiminished, and he feared Fortune herself, lest some god might deem that she had already been too kind to him and more constant than human beings were meant to find her. He himself had risen to the glory of his elders, and he rejoiced to see others growing up to the measure of his own. There was no lack of great offices in Rome for the bravest men, nor of brave men for the offices.

Such moderation but intensified the well-merited enthusiasm of his friends; and Fabius, thinking that it would have to be restrained by respect for the laws, bade read aloud the statute which prohibited the re-election of the same man to the consulship within ten years.¹ Whereupon there was such a clamouring that the law could scarce be heard, and the tribunes of the plebs declared that it should be no impediment, for they would propose to the people that he be granted a dispensation from the laws. Fabius, for his part, stoutly persisted in his refusal. What, in that case, he demanded, was the good of making laws, when their very makers broke them? The laws were no longer in control, but were themselves controlled. Nevertheless the people proceeded to the election, and every century, as it was summoned within, in no uncertain terms named Fabius consul.² Then at last, overborne by the consent of all the citizens, "May Heaven," he said, "approve, Quirites, of what you are doing and propose to do. For the rest, since you are bound to have your way with me, grant me a favour in the matter of my colleague and make consul

A.U.C. 13 P. Decium, expertum mihi concordi collegio virum, 456 dignum vobis, dignum parente suo, quaeſo mecum consulem faciat." Iusta suffragatio visa. Omnes quae ſupererant centuriae Q. Fabium, P. Decium consules dixere.

14 Eo anno plerisque dies dicta ab aedilibus, quia
 plus quam quod lege finitum erat agri possiderent;
 nec quisquam ferme est purgatus vinculumque ingens
 immodiae cupiditati¹ iniectum est.

A.U.C.
 457 XIV. Consules novi, Q. Fabius Maximus quartum et P. Decius Mus tertium, cum inter se agitarent 2 uti alter Samnites hostes, alter Etruscos deligeret, quantaeque in hanc aut in illam provinciam copiae
 satis et uter ad utrum bellum dux idoneus magis
 3 esset, ab Sutrio et Nepete et Faleriis legati, auctores concilia² Etruriae populorum de petenda pace
 haberi,³ totam belli molem in Samnum averterunt.
 4 Profecti consules, quo expeditiores commeatus essent et incertior hostis qua venturum bellum foret, Fabius per Soranum, Decius per Sidicinum agrum, in Samnum legiones ducunt.

5 Ubi in hostium fines ventum est, uterque populabundus effuso agmine incedit. Explorant tamen
 6 latius quam populantur; igitur non fefeller ad
 Tifernum hostes in occulta valle instructi, quam
 ingressos Romanos superiore ex loco adoriri para-

¹ cupiditati₅: cupiditatis Ω.

² concilia D³: concilii Ω: aconcilii M: concilium U.

³ haberi Ω: habit Conway (reading concilii above with the MSS.).

¹ The elder Decius had devoted himself in 340 B.C. The son had been consul with Fabius in 308 B.C. (viii. ix. and xli).

with me Publius Decius, a man whose friendliness ^{B.C. 298} I have experienced in the fellowship of office, a man worthy of you and worthy of his sire."¹ The recommendation seemed a reasonable one. All the remaining centuries voted for Quintus Fabius and Publius Decius.

In that year many men were prosecuted by the aediles on the charge of possessing more land than the law allowed. Hardly anybody was acquitted, and exorbitant greed was sharply curbed.

XIV. While the new consuls, Quintus Fabius ^{B.C. 297} Maximus (in his fourth term) and Publius Decius Mus (in his third), were laying plans together how one should take the field against the Samnites, and the other against the Etruscans, and were considering what forces would suffice for these respective provinces and which of them was the better suited to the one command and which to the other, there came deputies from Sutrium and Nepete and Falerii, with the news that the nations of Etruria were counselling together how they might sue for peace, and thus diverted upon Samnium the whole burden of war. When the consuls set out, in order to lessen the difficulty of getting supplies and to keep the enemy uncertain where the attack would come, Fabius marched into Samnium by way of Sora, Decius through the territory of the Sidicini.

Arrived at the borders of the enemy, each spread his army over a wide front and pillaged. Yet they scouted more widely than they pillaged, and the enemy were therefore unable to surprise them near Tifernum, where they had drawn their forces up in a secluded valley, and were preparing to assail the Romans from above, once they should have

A.U.C. 7 bant. Fabius impedimentis in locum tutum remotis 457 praesidioque modico imposito praemonitis militibus adesse certamen, quadrato agmine ad praedictas 8 hostium latebras succedit. Samnites desperato im-proviso tumultu, quando in apertum semel discriminem evasura esset res, et ipsi acie iusta maluerunt con-currere. Itaque in aequum descendunt ac fortunae 9 se maiore animo quam spe committunt. Ceterum, sive quia ex omnium Samnitium populis, quodcumque roboris fuerat contraxerant, seu quia discriminem sum-mae rerum augebat¹ animos, aliquantum aperta
 quoque² pugna praebuerunt terroris.

10 Fabius, ubi nulla ex parte hostem loco moveri vidit, Maximum filium et M. Valerium tribunos militum, cum quibus ad primam aciem procurrerat, 11 ire ad equites iubet et adhortari ut, si quando unquam equestri ope adiutam rem publicam meminerint, illo
 die adnitantur ut ordinis eius gloriam invictam 12 praestent: peditum certamine immobilem hostem restare; omnem reliquam spem in impetu esse equitum. Et ipsos nominatim iuvenes, pari comitate utrumque, nunc laudibus nunc promissis onerat.
 13 Ceterum quando ne ea quoque temptata vis parum
 proficeret timeri poterat, consilio³ grassandum, si

¹ augebat ζ: agebat TDL: angebat MO: āgebat A.

² aliquantum aperta quoque ζ: aliquantum quoque aperta MOTDLA.

³ ceterum . . . consilio Madrig: ceterum quando ne
 (nec OL) ea quoque temptata vis proficeret consilio Ω.

entered it. Removing the baggage to a place of safety and appointing a small force to guard it, Fabius warned his troops that a struggle was at hand, and forming them into a hollow square, led them up towards the place where the enemy lay, as I have said, concealed. Balked of their surprise attack, the Samnites—since it must ultimately come to an open trial of strength—likewise preferred to fight a regular engagement. They accordingly descended to level ground, and committed their cause to Fortune, with courage greater than their hopes. However, whether owing to their having assembled the fighting strength of all the Samnite nations, or because a contest on which everything was staked heightened their valour, they occasioned some perturbation amongst the Romans, even in an open battle.

When Fabius saw that the enemy were nowhere giving way, he ordered Maximus his son¹ and Marcus Valerius—military tribunes with whom he had hurried to the front—to go to the horsemen and tell them that if they remembered ever an occasion when the state had been helped by the horse, now was the time for them to exert their strength to preserve untarnished the glory of that body: in the struggle of infantry the enemy were yielding not an inch; no hope remained save in a charge of cavalry. Addressing each of the young men by name, he loaded them now with praise and now with promises. But since it was conceivable that even their prowess might prove to be inadequate, he thought proper to resort to strategy, if strength

¹ Quintus Fabius Maximus Gurges, aedile two years later (chap. xxxi. § 9) and consul 293 B.C. (chap. xlvi. § 5).

- 4.5.6. 14 nihil vires iuvarent ratus, Scipionem legatum hastatos ⁴⁵⁷ primae legionis subtrahere ex acie et ad montes proximos quam posset occultissime circumducere iubet; inde ascensu abdito a conspectu erigere in montes agmen aversoque hosti ab tergo repente se ostendere.
- 15 Equites ducibus tribunis haud multo plus hostibus quam suis ex improviso ante signa evecti praebuerunt
 16 tumultus. Adversus incitatas turmas stetit immota Samnitium acies nec parte ulla pelli aut perrumpi potuit; et postquam inritum incepsum erat, recepti
 17 post signa proelio excesserunt. Crevit ex eo hostium animus, nec sustinere frons prima tam longum certamen incrementemque fiducia sui vim potuisset, ni secunda acies iussu consulis in primum successisset. Ibi integrae vires sistunt invehementem se iam Samnitem; et tempore in ipso visa¹ ex montibus signa clamorque sublatus non vero tantum metu
 19 terruere Samnitium animos; nam et Fabius Decium collegam adpropinquare exclamavit, et pro se quisque miles adesse alterum consulem, adesse legiones
 20 gaudio alacres fremunt; errorque² utilis Romanis oblatus fugae formidinisque Samnites implevit, maxime³ territos ne ab altero exercitu integro 21 intactoque fessi opprimerentur. Et quia passim in

¹ et tempore in ipso visa Drakenborch: et tempore inprovisa MOTDLA: et tempore in se uisa PF: eo tempore uisa C: et tempore ipso visa I. Perizonius: et tempore inferri uisa Conway.

² errorque ζ Modius: terrorque Ω .

³ maxime ζ : maximeq. Ω .

¹ These "spearmen" formed the first of the three lines of battle, but would ordinarily after being engaged a little while be reinforced or replaced (as here) by the principes (second line troops).

should not achieve his purpose. So he ordered ^{B.C. 297} Scipio, his lieutenant, to withdraw the *hastati*¹ of the first legion from the battle and conduct them, as secretly as possible, by a circuitous route to the nearest mountains; they were then, concealing their ascent from observation, to climb the heights and suddenly show themselves on the enemy's rear.

The cavalry, led by the tribunes, occasioned hardly more confusion in their enemies than in their friends, as they rode out unexpectedly in front of the standards. The Samnite line held firm against their galloping squadrons, and could at no point be forced back or broken, and the cavalry, finding their attack abortive, retired behind the lines and left the battle. This gave the enemy a fresh access of spirits; and the front ranks would have been incapable of sustaining so long a struggle and the increasing violence with which the enemy's confidence inspired him, had not the second line, by the consul's order, come up to relieve them. Their fresh strength halted the Samnites, who were now pressing forward; and catching sight just at this juncture of our detachments descending from the mountains, and hearing the cheer they gave, the enemy was filled with terror of worse things than actually threatened him; for Fabius shouted that his colleague Decius was approaching, and the soldiers themselves in their joy and eagerness cried out that the other consul was at hand—that the legions were at hand; and this mistake, occurring in a good hour for the Romans, filled the Samnites with fear and bewilderment, for they dreaded nothing so much as that the other army, fresh and entire, might overwhelm them in their exhausted

A.U.C.
457

fugam dissipati sunt, minor caedes quam pro tanta victoria fuit: tria milia et quadringenti caesi, capti octingenti ferme et triginta, signa militaria capta tria et viginti.

A.U.C.
458

XV. Samnitibus Apuli se ante proelium coniunxissent, ni P. Decius consul iis ad Maleventum castra obiecisset, extractos deinde ad certamen fudisset.

2 Ibi quoque plus fugae fuit quam caedis: duo milia Apulorum caesa; spretoque eo hoste Decius in Samnium legiones duxit. Ibi duo consulares exercitus diversis vagati partibus omnia spatio quinque mensum evastarunt. Quinque et quadraginta¹ loca in Samnio fuere in quibus Deci castra fuerunt, alterius 5 consulis sex et octoginta; nec valli tantum ac fossarum vestigia reicta, sed multo alia illis² insigniora monumenta vastitatis circa regionumque depopulatarum. Fabius etiam urbem Cimetram cepit. Ibi capta armatorum duo milia nongenti, caesi pugnantes ferme nongenti triginta.

7 Inde comitiorum causa Romam profectus maturavit eam rem agere. Cum primo vocatae³ Q. Fabium consulem dicerent omnes centuriae, Ap. 8 Claudius, consularis candidatus, vir acer et ambitious, non sui magis honoris causa quam ut patricii recipерarent duo consularia loca, cum suis tum totius nobilitatis viribus incubuit ut se cum Q. Fabio con-

¹ quinque et quadraginta Walters and Conway: xl et v (or at length) MIFUO: et xl et xv (or at length) TDLA.

² alia illis Walters and Conway: aliis Ω : illis Σ.

³ vocatae Σ: uocatum Ω.

¹ Later Beneventum. See ix. xxvii. 14 and note.

state. The slaughter was less than is usual in so b.c. 297 great a victory, for the enemy scattered far and wide in their flight. Three thousand four hundred were slain; about eight hundred and thirty were made prisoners, and twenty-three standards were taken.

XV. The Apulians would have joined the Samnites b.c. 296 before the battle had not Publius Decius the consul encamped over against them at Maleventum,¹ and then drawn them into an engagement and defeated them. In this instance also the rout was greater than the slaughter: two thousand Apulians were killed, and Decius, scorning such an enemy, led his legions into Samnium. There the two consular armies, overrunning the land in different directions, had laid all waste within four months' time. There were forty-five places in Samnium where Decius had encamped; the other consul had encamped in eighty-six. Nor did they leave behind them only the traces of their ramparts and their trenches, but other much more conspicuous memorials, in the havoc and devastation of the country round about. Fabius also captured the city of Cimetra. In this siege two thousand nine hundred men-at-arms were taken and some nine hundred and thirty were slain fighting.

After this he set out for Rome for the election, which he made haste to call. The centuries that voted first were all naming Quintus Fabius for consul, when Appius Claudius, who was a candidate for that post and a pushing and ambitious man, but no more eager to gain the honour for himself than to have the patricians recover two consular places, exerted his own strength and that of the whole nobility to induce them to elect him as Fabius's

A.C.C. 9 sulem dicerent. Fabius de se¹ eadem fere quae 458 priore anno dicendo abnuere. Circumstare sellam omnis nobilitas; orare ut ex caeno plebeio consullatum extraheret maiestatemque pristinam cum 10 honori tum patriciis gentibus redderet. Fabius silentio facto media oratione studia hominum sedavit; facturum enim se fuisse dixit ut duorum patriciorum nomina reciperet, si alium quam se con-11 sulem fieri videret; nunc se suam rationem comitiis, cum contra leges futurum sit, pessimo exemplo non 12 habiturum. Ita L. Volumnius de plebe cum Ap.
 Claudio consul est factus, priore item consulatu inter se comparati. Nobilitas obiectare Fabio fugisse eum Ap. Clodium collegam, eloquentia civilibusque artibus haud dubie praestantem.

XVI. Comitiis perfectis veteres consules iussi bellum in Samnio gerere prorogato in sex menses
 2 imperio. Itaque in sequenti quoque anno L. Volumnio
 Ap. Claudio consulibus P. Decius, qui consul in Samnio relictus a collega fuerat, proconsul idem populari non destitut agros, donec Samnitium exer-
 citum nusquam se proelio committentem postremo 3 expulit finibus.

Etruriam pulsi petierunt, et quod legationibus
 nequiquam saepe temptaverant, id se tanto agmine

¹ de se Walters note: primo de se Ω: de se primo F.

¹ 307 B.C. (ix. xlvi. 2).

colleague. Fabius would not have it so, raising ^{B.C. 296} virtually the same objections he had raised in the previous year. The nobles all thronged about his seat, and besought him to lift up the consulship out of the plebeian mire and restore both to the office and to the aristocratic families their old-time dignity. Obtaining silence, Fabius soothed their excited feelings with a temperate speech, in which he said that he would have done as they desired and have received the names of two patricians, if he had seen another than himself being made consul; as it was, he would not entertain his own name at an election, for to do so would violate the laws and establish a most evil precedent. So Lucius Volumnius, a plebeian, was returned, together with Appius Claudius, with whom he had also been paired in an earlier consulship.¹ The nobles taunted Fabius with having avoided Appius Claudius for a colleague, as a man clearly his superior in eloquence and statecraft.

XVI. The election over, the old consuls were bidden to carry on the war in Samnium, having received an extension of their command for six months. So in the following year likewise—the consulship of Lucius Volumnius and Appius Claudius—Publius Decius, who had been left behind in Samnium, when consul, by his colleague, ceased not as proconsul to lay waste the farms, until finally he forced the army of the Samnites—which would nowhere risk a battle—to withdraw from the country.

They retreated into Etruria, and thinking that what they had often tried in vain to bring about by means of embassies they might with so great armatorum mixtis terrore precibus acturos efficacius rati, postulaverunt principum Etruriae con-

 4 cilium. Quo coacto per quot annos pro libertate dimicent cum Romanis exponunt: omnia expertos esse si suismet ipsorum viribus tolerare tantam
 5 molem belli possent; temptasse etiam haud magni momenti finitimarum gentium auxilia. Petisse pacem a populo Romano, cum bellum tolerare non possent; rebellasse, quod pax servientibus gravior
 6 quam liberis bellum esset. Unam sibi spem reliquam in Etruscis restare; scire gentem Italiae oppulentissimam armis, viris, pecunia esse; habere accolas Gallos, inter ferrum et arma natos, feroce cum suopte ingenio tum adversus Romanum populum, quem captum a se auroque redemptum, haud vana
 7 iactantes, memorent; nihil abesse, si sit animus Etruscis qui Porsinnae quandam maioribusque eorum fuerit, quin Romanos omni agro cis Tiberim pulsos dimicare pro salute sua non de intolerando Italiae
 8 regno cogant. Samnitem illis exercitum paratum, instructum armis, stipendio venisse, et confestim secuturos, vel si ad ipsam Romanam urbem oppugnandam ducant.

XVII. Haec eos in Etruria iactantes molientesque bellum domi Romanum urebat. Nam P. Decius, ubi

¹ See II. ix.-xv.

a body of armed men and the menace which would ^{B.C. 296} be added to their entreaties accomplish more effectually, called for a council of the Etruscan leaders. On its assembling, they pointed out for how many years they had been fighting with the Romans for their liberty. They had made every effort, they said, if haply they might of their own strength bear up under so great a war; and had also—but to little purpose—made trial of the help of neighbouring nations. Unable to sustain the war, they had sought peace of the Roman People; but had renewed hostilities, because peace with servitude was harder to endure than war with liberty. Their sole remaining hope lay in the Etruscans, whom they knew for the richest nation of Italy, in arms, in men, and in money; a nation, too, that marched with the Gauls, men born amid the clash of arms and possessing not only an instinctive love of fighting but a feeling of enmity to the Roman People, whose defeat at their hands and ransom for gold they were wont to relate with no idle boast. If the Etruscans had the spirit that once had animated Porsinna¹ and their fore-fathers, there was no reason why they should not expel the Romans from all the country north of the Tiber, and compel them to fight, not for an intolerable sovereignty over Italy, but for their own existence. Here was a Samnite army, provided with arms and pay, and ready to follow on the instant, though they should lead it to the assault of Rome itself.

XVII. While they were thus boasting and intriguing in Etruria, the Roman invasion was distressing their countrymen at home. For Publius Decius, having

A.U.C.
458

comperit per exploratores profectum Samnitium
 2 exercitum, advocato consilio "Quid per agros" inquit
 "vagamur vicatim circumferentes bellum? Quin urbes et moenia adgredimur? Nullus iam exercitus Samnio 3 praesidet; cessere finibus ac sibimet ipsi exsiliū concivere." Adprobantibus cunctis ad Murgantiam, validam urbem, oppugnandam ducit, tantusque ardor militum fuit et caritate ducis et spe maioris quam ex
 agrestibus populationibus praedae ut uno die vi atque 4 armis urbem caperent. Ibi duo milia Samnitium et centum pugnantes circumventi captique, et alia praeda ingens capta est. Quae ne impedimentis gravibus agmen oneraret, convocari milites Decius 5 iubet. "Hacine" inquit "victoria sola aut hac praeda contenti estis futuri? Voltis vos pro virtute spes gerere? Omnes Samnitium urbes fortunaeque in urbibus relictæ vestrae sunt, quando legiones
 eorum tot proeliis fusas postremo finibus expūlistis.
 6 Vendite ista et inlicite lucro mercatorem ut sequatur agmen; ego subinde suggeram quae vendatis. Ad Romuleam urbem hinc eamus, ubi vos labor haud
 maior, praeda maior manet."

7 Divendita praeda ultro adhortantes imperatorem ad Romuleam pergunt. Ibi quoque sine opere, sine tormentis, simul admota sunt signa, nulla vi deterriti

ascertained through scouts that the Samnite army had departed, summoned a council, and said, “ Why do we range about the countryside, bringing war to this, that, and the other village? Why do we not assail cities and walled towns? There is no longer any army defending Samnium; they have withdrawn beyond their borders, sentenced to banishment by their own decree.” With their unanimous approval he led them to the assault of Murgantia, a strong city; and such was the ardour of the troops, by reason both of affection for their general and the hopes that they entertained of greater booty than was to be got by ranging the country, that they took the place by force of arms in a single day. There two thousand one hundred Samnites were surrounded and made prisoners as they fought, and vast spoils of other kinds were seized. Lest these should encumber the marching army with heavy baggage, Decius called the soldiers together and thus addressed them: “ Will this single victory or these spoils content you? Will your expectations not be equal to your courage? All the cities of the Samnites and the riches left behind in them are yours, since, after defeating their legions in so many battles, you have in the end expelled them from their country. Sell these prizes and with hope of gain lure the traders on to follow your column; I will find you from time to time wares to dispose of. Let us go from here to the city Romulea, where no greater toil awaits you, but greater booty.”

The booty was sold off, and the men themselves urging on their general, they marched to Romulea. There, too, they used no siege-works or artillery; but once they had come up under the walls, no force

A.U.C.
458

a muris, qua cuique proximum fuit, scalis raptim
 8 admotis in moenia evasere. Captum oppidum ac direptum est; ad duo milia et trecenti occisi et sex 9 milia hominum capta, et miles ingenti praeda potitus, quam vendere, sicut priorem, coactus; Ferentinum
 inde, quinquam nihil quietis dabatur, tamen summa 10 alacritate ductus est.¹ Ceterum ibi plus laboris ac periculi fuit: et defensa summa vi moenia sunt, et locus erat munimento naturaque tutus; sed evicit omnia adsuetus praedae miles. Ad tria milia hostium circa muros caesa; praeda militis fuit.

11 Huius oppugnatarum urbium decoris pars maior in quibusdam annalibus ad Maximum trahitur: Murgantiam ab Decio, a Fabio Ferentinum Romu-12 leamque oppugnatas tradunt. Sunt qui novorum consulum hanc gloriam faciant, quidam non am-borum sed alterius, L.² Volumni: ei Samnium provinciam evenisse.

XVIII. Cum³ ea in Samnio cuiuscumque ductu auspicioque gererentur, Romanis in Etruria interim
 bellum ingens multis ex gentibus concitur, cuius
 2 auctor Gellius Egnatius ex Samnitibus erat. Tusci fere omnes conciverant bellum; traxerat contagio proximos Umbriae populos, et Gallica auxilia mercede sollicitabantur; omnis ea multitudo ad castra Sam-3 nitium conveniebat. Qui tumultus repens postquam

¹ ductus est Madvig: ductus Ω.

² L. Sigonius (cf. § 3 and Chap. xvi. § 2, and C.I.L. i², p. 132): p. Ω (wanting in O).

³ cum Gronovius: dum Ω (wanting in O).

could constrain them to retire ; quickly setting up B.C. 296 their ladders at the nearest places, they swarmed over the battlements. The town was captured and sacked ; two thousand three hundred were slain and six thousand made prisoners, and the soldiers came into possession of huge spoils which they were obliged, as before, to sell. After that they marched with the utmost alacrity—though they had been allowed no time to rest—to Ferentinum. But there they encountered more difficulty and danger : the city was defended with the utmost energy, and fortification and nature had combined to make it safe ; yet all obstacles were overcome by a soldiery grown used to plunder. Some three thousand of the enemy were slain about the walls ; the spoils went to the men.

Of the glory accruing from these sieges the larger share is in certain annals assigned to Maximus ; they allow that Murgantia was stormed by Decius, but give to Fabius Ferentinum and Romulea. There are those who claim the credit for the new consuls, and some give it not to both but to one of them, Lucius Volumnius, to whom, they say, fell the command in Samnium.

XVIII. Whilst these operations were being carried out in Samnium—whoever had the command and auspices—a mighty war was preparing against the Romans in Etruria, on the part of many nations, at the instigation of a Samnite named Gellius Egnatius. The Tuscans had almost all voted for war : the nearest Umbrian tribes had caught the contagion ; and Gallic auxiliaries were being solicited for pay. All this multitude was assembling at the camp of the Samnites. When news of this sudden rising

- est Romam perlatus, cum iam L. Volumnius consul cum legione secunda ac tertia sociorumque milibus quindecim profectus in Samnium esset, Ap. Claudium primo quoque tempore in Etruriam ire placuit.
- 4 Duae Romanae legiones secutae, prima et quarta, et sociorum duodecim milia; castra haud procul ab hoste posita.
- 5 Ceterum magis eo profectum est quod mature ventum erat ut quosdam spectantes iam arma Etruriae populos metus Romani nominis comprimeret quam quod ductu consulis quicquam ibi satis scite aut 6 fortunate gestum sit: multa proelia locis et temporibus inquis commissa, spesque in dies graviorem hostem faciebat, et iam prope erat ut nec duci 7 milites nec militibus dux satis fideret. Litteras ad collegam accersendum ex Samnio missas in trinis aunalibus invenio; piget tamen in certo¹ ponere, cum ea ipsa inter consules populi Romani, iam iterum eodem honore fungentes, disceptatio² fuerit, Appio abnuente missas, Volumnio adfirmante Appi se litteris accitum.
- 8 Iam Volumnius in Samnio tria castella ceperat, in quibus ad tria milia hostium caesa erant, dimidium fere eius captum, et Lucanorum seditiones a plebeiiis et gentibus ducibus ortas summa optimatum voluntate per Q. Fabium, pro consule missum eo cum 9 vetere exercitu, compresserat. Decio populandos hos-

¹ in certo Walters: incertum Ω: id certum Buetner.

² disceptatio M¹ or M²: discepatio M: discrepacio M¹ (or M²) PFUOTDLA.

¹ This is the first time that Livy has designated the legions by number. A consular army regularly comprised two legions (with their cavalry and auxiliaries), but in the present instance the consular armies of the previous year are still in the field.

was brought to Rome, Lucius Volumnius the consul, B.C. 296 with the second and third legions and fifteen thousand of the allies, had already set out for Samnium, and it was resolved to send Appius Claudius into Etruria at the earliest possible moment. Two Roman legions followed him, the first and fourth, and twelve thousand of the allies. They encamped not far from the enemy.¹

But the consul's prompt arrival accomplished more, by checking, through dread of the Roman name, certain peoples of Etruria that were already meditating war, than he gained by his generalship, which was characterized neither by much ability nor by good fortune. He repeatedly joined battle at untoward times and places, and the enemy grew every day more hopeful and more formidable, until now the soldiers were near losing confidence in their commander and he in them. I find it recorded by three annalists that he dispatched a letter sending for his colleague out of Samnium; yet am I loath to set it down for certain, since the consuls of the Roman People, now holding that office for the second time, disputed about that very point—Appius denying that he had sent a letter, Volumnius affirming that a letter from Appius had summoned him.

Volumnius had already captured three fortresses in Samnium, in which some three thousand of the enemy had been slain and about half as many taken prisoners; and dispatching Quintus Fabius as pro-consul with a seasoned army into Lucania, he had suppressed—with the hearty approval of the optimates—certain insurrections which had broken out there at the instigation of necessitous plebeian agitators. Leaving to Decius the devastation of tiū agros relinquit, ipse cum suis copiis in Etruriam ad collegam pergit. Quem advenientem laeti omnes accepere. Appium ex conscientia sua credo animum habuisse—haud immerito iratum si nihil scripserat, inliberali et ingrato animo, si eguerat ope, dissimulanten,—vix enim salute mutua redditā cum obviam egressus esset, “Satin salvae”¹ inquit, “L. Volumni? Ut sese in Samnio res habent? Quae te causa, ut provincia tua excederes induxit?” Volumnius in Samnio res prosperas esse ait, litteris eius accitum venisse; quae si falsae fuerint nec usus sui sit in Etruriam, extemplo conversis signis abiturum. “Tu vero abeas” inquit, “neque te quisquam moratur; etenim minime consentaneum est, cum bello tuo forsitan vix sufficias, huc² te ad opem ferendam aliis gloriari venisse.” Bene Hercules verteret, dicere Volumnius: malle frustra operam insumptam, quam quicquam incidisse cur non satis esset Etruriae unus consularis exercitus.

XIX. Digredientes iam consules legati tribunique ex Appiano exercitu circumsistunt. Pars imperatorem suum orare, ne collegae auxilium, quod acciendum ultiō fuerit, sua sponte oblatum sperneretur; plures abeunti Volumnio obsistere; obtestari ne pravo cum collega certamine rem publicam prodat:

¹ salvae ζ : salue Ω (wanting in O).

² hue A³ (or A⁴) ζ : hic Ω (wanting in O).

the fields, Volumnius himself with his own troops B.C. 296 marched to join his colleague in Etruria, where he was welcomed on his arrival with general rejoicings. But what Appius was feeling his conscience alone could tell!—indeed he was justly angered if he had sent no word, but illiberal and ungracious if he had needed help and now sought to dissemble—for coming forth to meet his colleague, before they had fairly greeted one another, he demanded, “Is all well, Lucius Volumnius? How stand affairs in Samnium? What has moved you to come out of your own province?” Volumnius replied that affairs were prospering in Samnium, and that he was come being sent for by Appius’ own letter; but if this were a forgery and he were not needed in Etruria, he would immediately face about and march back. “By all means go!” cried Appius. “No one hinders you! For truly it is no way fitting that when, perhaps, you are hardly equal to your own war, you should boast of coming hither to help others.” Volumnius prayed that Hercules might direct all for the best; he had rather, he said, his trouble should go for naught than that anything should have befallen to make one consular army insufficient for Etruria.

XIX. The consuls were parting, when the lieutenants and tribunes from the army of Appius gathered round them. Some of them besought their general not to spurn his colleague’s help—which ought even to have been asked for—now that it was proffered voluntarily; the greater number threw themselves in the way of Volumnius, as he turned to go, and conjured him not to betray the welfare of the state by an unworthy quarrel with his colleague: if any

A.U.C.
458 si qua clades incidisset, desertori magis quam deserto
 3 noxae fore; eo rem adductam ut omne¹ rei bene
 aut secus gestae in Etruria decus dedecusque ad L.
 Volumnium sit delegatum; neminem quae siturum
 quae verba Appi sed quae fortuna exercitus fuerit;
 4 dimitti ab Appio eum sed a re publica et ab exercitu
 retineri: experiretur modo voluntatem militum.
 5 Haec monendo obtestandoque prope restitantes consules in contionem pertraxerunt. Ibi orationes longiores habitae in eandem ferme sententiam in 6 quam inter paucos certatim verbis fuerat. Et cum Volumnius, causa superior, ne infacundus quidem
 adversus eximiam eloquentiam collegae visus esset, 7 cavillansque Appius sibi acceptum referre diceret
 debere, quod ex muto atque elingui facundum etiam
 consulem haberent: priore consulatu, primis utique 8 mensibus, hiscere eum nequisse, nunc iam populares orationes serere, "Quam mallem" inquit Volumnius,
 "tu a me strenue facere quam ego abs te scite loqui didicissem." Postremo condicionem ferre quae decretura sit non orator—neque enim id desiderare rem 9 publicam—sed imperator uter sit melior. Etruriam et Samnium provincias esse; utram mallet eligeret;
 suo exercitu se vel in Etruria vel in Samnio rem gesturum.

10 Tum militum clamor ortus ut simul ambo bellum

¹ omne σ Muretus: omni Ω : omnis TDLA.

¹ In their former consulship (397 B.C.) Volumnius had conducted a successful campaign against the Sallentini, while Appius had been left in Rome without any military command. See IX. xlvi. 4-5.

disaster should occur, the blame would lie more B.C. 293 with the deserter than the deserted ; to such a pass had matters come that the entire credit or disgrace of success or failure in Etruria was referred to Lucius Volumnius ; no one would enquire what the words of Appius had been, but what the fortune of the army ; he was being dismissed by Appius, but retained by the republic and the army ; let him but test the wishes of the soldiers.

Thus admonishing and entreating them they dragged the all but resisting consuls to the place of assembly. There they spoke at greater length, but substantially to the same effect as they had argued before in the hearing of a few ; and when Volumnius, besides having the better cause, likewise showed himself to be no mean orator in opposing the rare eloquence of his colleague, Appius jeeringly remarked that they ought to give himself the credit, for that instead of a mute and tongue-tied consul they had got one who was actually fluent, since in his former consulship, at all events in its early months, he had been incapable of opening his mouth, but was now delivering popular orations.—“How I could wish,” exclaimed Volumnius, “that you might rather have learnt from me to act with vigour than that I should have learnt to speak cleverly from you !” In conclusion he proposed a compact which would determine, not which was the better orator—for this was not what the republic wanted—but the better general.¹ Etruria and Samnium were the nations to be conquered ; let Appius choose which he liked ; with his own army he would campaign either in Etruria or in Samnium.

Then the soldiers began to cry out that both

A.U.C. 11 Etruscum susciperent. Quo animadverso consensu 458 Volumnius "Quoniam in collegae voluntate interpretanda" inquit "erravi, non committam ut quid vos velitis obscurum sit: manere an abire me velitis 12 clamore significate." Tum vero tantus est clamor exortus ut hostes e castris exciret. Armis arreptis in aciem¹ descendunt. Et Volumnius signa canere ac vexilla efferri castris iussit; Appium addubitassem 13 ferunt, cernentem seu pugnante seu quieto se fore collegae victoram; deinde veritum ne suae quoque legiones Volumnium sequerentur, et ipsum flagitantibus suis signum dedisse.
 14 Ab neutra parte satis commode instructi fuerunt;
 nam et Samnitium dux Gellius Egnatius pabulatum
 cum cohortibus paucis ierat suoque impetu magis milites quam cuiusquam ductu aut imperio pugnam
 capessebant et Romani exercitus nec pariter ambo 15 ducti nec satis temporis ad instruendum fuit. Prius concurrit Volumnius quam Appius ad hostem per-16 veniret; itaque fronte inaequali concursum est; et velut sorte² quadam mutante, adsuetos inter se
 hostes Etrisci Volumnio, Samnites parumper cunctati, 17 quia dux aberat, Appio occurrere. Dicitur Appius in medio pugnae discrimine, ita ut inter prima signa
 manibus ad caelum sublatis conspiceretur, ita precatus

¹ in aciem T²A²: in acie Ω (wanting in O).

² et velut sorte ξ Duker (VI. xxi. 2): et velut forte
MTDLA: et ut forte PFO: ut et forte U.

¹ i.e. from the higher ground on which their camp lay, into the plain below.

² The ancients prayed with the arms outstretched and palms turned upwards.

B.C. 296

should undertake the Etruscan war together. Perceiving them to be of one mind in this, Volumnius said, "Since I erred in interpreting my colleague's wishes, I will not make the blunder of leaving yours in doubt: do you signify by a shout whether you would have me stay or go." Then in truth they cheered so loud that the enemy were drawn out from their camp, and snatching up their arms went down¹ into line of battle. Volumnius, too, bade sound the signal and advance the banners from the camp. Appius, they say, was uncertain what to do, perceiving that, whether he fought or refrained from fighting, the victory would be his colleague's; then, fearing that even his own legions would follow Volumnius, he, too, gave his men the signal for which they were clamouring.

On neither side had the forces been very advantageously marshalled; for the Samnite commander Gellius Egnatius had taken a few cohorts and gone off to forage, and his soldiers were entering the battle more as their own impulse guided them than under anybody's leadership or orders, and the Roman armies were not both led out together nor had they sufficient time to form. Volumnius was engaged before Appius came within reach of the enemy, and the line of attack was accordingly uneven. Moreover, as though lots had been cast, there was a shifting of the customary opponents, the Etruscans confronting Volumnius, and the Samnites—after a little hesitation, owing to the absence of their general—meeting Appius. It is said that when the conflict was at its hottest, Appius was seen to lift up his hands² in the very forefront of the standards and utter this petition: "Bellona,

A.U.C. 458 esse: "Bellona, si hodie nobis victoriam duis, ast 18 ego tibi templum voveo." Haec precatus, velut instigante dea, et ipse collegae et exercitus virtutem aequavit ducis. Iam et duces imperatoria¹ opera exsequuntur, et milites ne ab altera parte prius 19 victoria incipiat adnituntur. Ergo fundunt fugantque hostes, maiorem molem haud facile sustinentes quam 20 cum qua manus conserere adsueti fuerant. Urgendo cedentes insequendoque effusos compulere ad castra.
 Ibi interventu Gelli cohortiumque Sabellarum paulis per recruduit pugna. Iis quoque mox fusis iam a 21 victoribus castra oppugnabantur; et cum Volumnius ipse portae signa inferret, Appius Bellonam victricem identidem celebrans accenderet² militum animos, 22 per vallum, per fossas intruperunt. Castra capta direptaque; praeda ingens parta et militi concessa
 est. Septem milia octingenti³ hostium occisi, duo milia et centum viginti capti.

XX. Dum ambo consules omnisque Romana vis in Etruscum bellum magis inclinat, in Samnio novi exercitus exorti ad populandos imperii Romani fines
 per Vescinos⁴ in Campaniam Falernumque agrum 2 transcurrent ingentesque praedas faciunt. Volumnium magnis itineribus in Samnum redeuntem—
 iam enim Fabio Decioque prorogati imperii finis

¹ Iam et duces imperatoria Walters and Conway (note): et
 duces imperatoria Wissenborn: imperatoria Ω.

² accederet ζ: accederant MPTDLA: accederat Ω.

³ octingenti edd.: acc PFTOTDLA: acccc MA².

⁴ Vescinos Sigonius (Conway, Ital. Dial. i, p. 283):
 uestinos Ω.

if to-day thou grant us the victory, then do I vow ^{B.C. 296} thee a temple." Having pronounced this prayer, as though the goddess were inspiring him, he kept pace with the courage of his colleague and the army kept pace with his. And now the generals were quitting themselves like true commanders, and the soldiers were striving that victory might not come first on the other wing. They therefore routed and put to flight the enemy, who found it no easy task to withstand a greater force than they had been wont to engage with. Pressing hard upon them when they faltered and pursuing where they fled, the Romans drove them to their camp. There, on the appearance of Gellius and the Sabellian cohorts, the battle was renewed for a little while; but presently, when these too had been dispersed, the conquering troops assailed the camp, and while Volumnius himself led a charge against the gate, and Appius, calling from time to time on Bellona, goddess of victory, inspirited his soldiers, they burst through the trenches and the rampart. The camp was taken and pillaged, and the vast booty found there was given over to the soldiers. Seven thousand eight hundred of the enemy were slain, two thousand one hundred and twenty taken prisoners.

XX. While both consuls and all the strength of Rome were being devoted mainly to the Etruscan war, new armies rose up in Samnium to waste the territories under Roman sway, and crossing over into Campania and the Falernian district, through the land of the Vescini, gathered in huge spoils. As Volumnius was returning by long marches into Samnium—for now the extension of authority granted to Fabius and Decius was drawing to a aderat—fama de Samnitium exercitu populationi-busque Campani agri ad tuendos socios convertit.

 3 Ut in Calenum venit, et ipse cernit recentia cladis vestigia et Caleni narrant tantum iam praedae hostes 4 trahere ut vix explicare agmen possint: itaque iam
propalam duces loqui extemplo eundum in Samnium esse, ut relicta ibi praeda in expeditionem redeant
nec tam oneratum agmen dimicationibus committant.
 5 Ea quamquam similia veris erant, certius tamen exploranda ratus dimittit equites, qui vagos praeda-tores in agris palantes intercipiant;¹ ex quibus
 6 inquirendo cognoscit ad Voltumnum flumen sedere hostem, inde tertia vigilia moturum; iter in Samnium
esse.

7 His satis exploratis profectus tanto intervallo ab
hostibus consedit ut nee adventus suus propinquitate
nimia nosci posset et egredientem e castris hostem
 8 opprimeret. Aliquanto ante lucem ad castra aecessit gnarosque Oscae linguae exploratum quid agatur mittit. Intermixti hostibus, quod facile erat in nocturna trepidatione, cognoscunt infrequentia arma-tis signa egressa, praedam praedaeque custodes
exire, immobile agmen et sua quemque molientem

¹ intercipiant M³ (or M⁴, A²): incipient M: excipiant N.

¹ Their command had been extended for six months (chap. xvi. § 1).

close¹—a rumour about the Samnite army and its B.C. 296 depredations in the territory of Campania turned him aside to the defence of the allies. When he came to the Calenian country, he saw for himself the fresh traces of the enemy's ravages, and the Calenians informed him that the Samnites had already so great a train of booty as to march with difficulty, and their leaders were saying openly that they must retire at once into Samnium, and leaving their plunder there, return to the invasion, and not subject an army so heavily burdened to the risks of battle. These reports were plausible enough; nevertheless he thought it right to obtain more authentic information. He therefore sent out horsemen in various directions, to intercept straggling plunderers in the fields, from whom he learned, on questioning them, that their army was encamped at the Volturnus river, whence they would set forward in the third watch and march towards Samnium.

Being satisfied of the truth of these reports, he followed the enemy and encamped at such a distance from them that while they could not learn of his arrival from his being too close at hand, he yet might surprise them as they were leaving their camp. A little before dawn he approached the camp and sent ahead men who knew the Oscan language to find out what was being done. Mincing with their enemies, as they could easily do in the confusion of the dark, they learned that the standards had gone forward with a scanty following of men-at-arms, that the booty and its escort were just setting out, but that the column was incapable of progress, since every man was intent upon his

a.u.c.
458

nullo inter ullos¹ consensu nec satis certo imperio.
 9 Tempus adgrediendi aptissimum visum est, et iam
 lux adpetebat; itaque signa canere iussit agmenque 10 hostium adgreditur. Samnites praeda impediti, infrequentes armati, pars addere gradum ac p[re]se agere praedam, pars stare incerti utrum progrederi an regredi in castra tutius foret: inter cunctationem
 opprimuntur et Romani iam transcederant vallum 11 caedesque ac tumultus erat in castris. Samnitium agmen praeterquam hostili tumultu, captivorum
 etiam repentina defectione turbatum erat, qui partim 12 ipsi soluti vincos solvebant, partim arma in sarcinis deligata rapiebant tumultumque proelio ipso terri-biliorem intermixti agmini praebebant. Memo-13 randum deinde edidere facinus; nam Stium Minatum ducem adeuntem ordines hortantemque invadunt; dissipatis inde equitibus qui cum eo
 aderant ipsum circumsistunt insidentemque equo 14 captum ad consulem Romanum rapiunt. Revocata eo tumultu prima signa Samnitium, proeliumque iam
 profligatum integratum est; nec diutius sustineri 15 potuit. Caesa ad sex milia hominum, duo milia et quingenti capti—in eis tribuni militum quattuor—
 signa militaria triginta, et quod laetissimum

¹ inter ullos Madrig: inter alios Ω: deleted as a gloss by Walters and Conway.

¹ The Samnites, not anticipating any fighting, had put up their arms in the bundles, which were tied to a pole that was carried on the shoulder.

own affairs, with no common understanding among any of them nor any very definite leadership. The time seemed highly suitable for delivering an attack, and the day was breaking. Volumnius therefore ordered them to sound the charge and assailed the enemy's column. The Samnites were impeded by their booty and few of them were armed; some quickened their pace and drove the cattle before them, some stood still, uncertain whether it were safer to go on or to return to camp; while they hesitated, the Romans were upon them, and now they had sealed the rampart and the camp was filled with carnage and commotion. The Samnite column, besides being charged by the enemy, had also been disordered by a sudden outbreak of the prisoners, some of whom, being loose, were releasing those who were bound, while others were catching up the weapons tied up in the soldiers' packs,¹ and, mixed up with the column as they were, caused a hurly-burly that was more terrifying than the battle itself. They presently performed a remarkable exploit; for as Staius Minatius, the Samnite general, was riding along the ranks and encouraging them, they made a rush at him, and scattering the horsemen who were with him, surrounded him, and hurried him off a prisoner, horse and all, to the Roman consul. This tumult had the effect of bringing back the vanguard of the Samnites, who renewed the battle, which had been almost finished. But prolonged resistance was impossible. The slain amounted to six thousand men, and twenty-five hundred were captured—among them four military tribunes—as well as thirty standards. What caused most joy among the victors was the recovery of

LIVY

A.U.C.
458

victoribus fuit, captivorum recepta septem milia et quadringenti, et praeda¹ ingens sociorum; accitique
 edicto domini ad res suas noscendas recipiendasque 16 praestituta die. Quarum rerum non exstitit dominus, mili i concessae, coactique vendere praedam, ne
 alibi quam in armis animum haberent.

XXI. Magnum ea populatio Campani agri tu-
 2 multum Romae praebuerat; et per eos forte dies ex
 Etruria allatum erat post deductum inde Volumnia-num exercitum Etruriam concitam in arma, et Gellium Egnatium, Samnitium ducem, et Umbros
 ad defectionem vocari et Gallos pretio ingenti solli-3 citari. His nuntiis senatus conterritus iustitium indicie, dilectum omnis generis hominum haberi iussit.
 4 Nec ingenui modo aut iuniores sacramento adacti
 sed seniorum etiam cohortes factae libertinique centuriati; et defendendae urbis consilia agitabantur summaeque rerum praetor P. Sempronius praeerat.
 5 Ceterum parte curae exonerarunt senatum L. Vo-lumni consulis litterae, quibus caesos fusosque 6 populatores Campaniae cognitum est. Itaque et supplicationes ob rem bene gestam consulis nomine decernunt et² iustitium remittitur quod fuerat dies
 duodeviginti; supplicatioque perlaeta fuit.

¹ et praeda Madrig: praeda Ω.

² decernunt et, Madrig: decernunt Ω (-tur F).

seven thousand four hundred prisoners and a vast quantity of spoils belonging to the allies. The owners were summoned by proclamation to identify and recover their property on an appointed day. Those things for which no owner appeared were made over to the soldiers, and they were compelled to sell their booty, that they might have no concern in anything but fighting.

XXI. This raid upon the Campanian country-side had occasioned a great alarm in Rome; and just at that time, as it happened, there came news out of Etruria, that after the withdrawal of the army of Volumnius the Etruscans had been induced to arm, that Gellius Egnatius, the Samnite general, and the Umbrians were being invited to join in the revolt, and that the Gauls were being tempted with great sums of money. Terrified by these reports, the senate ordered that a cessation of the courts should be proclaimed, and that a levy should be held of every sort of men. Not only was the oath administered to free citizens of military age, but cohorts were also formed out of older men, and freedmen were mustered into centuries. Plans were discussed for defending the City, and the supreme command was given to the praetor, Publius Sempronius. But the senators were relieved of a part of their anxiety by a dispatch from Lucius Volumnius, the consul, apprising them of the slaughter and dispersion of the army that had ravaged Campania. They accordingly voted a thanksgiving for the victory, in the consul's name, and reopened the courts, which had been closed for eighteen days. The thanksgiving was a very joyful one.

A.U.C. 7 Tum de praesidio regionis depopulatae ab Samni-458 tibus agitari coeptum ; itaque placuit ut duae coloniae circa Vescinum¹ et Falernum agrum deducerentur, 8 una ad ostium Liris fluvii, quae Minturnae appellata, altera in saltu Vescino Falernum contingente
 agrum, ubi Sinope dicitur Graeca urbs fuisse, Sinuessa 9 deinde ab colonis Romanis appellata. Tribunis plebis negotium datum est, ut plebei scito iuberetur
 P. Sempronius praetor triumviro in ea loca colonis 10 deducendis creare. Nec qui nomina darent facile inveniebantur, quia in stationem se prope perpetuam
 infestae regionis, non in agros mitti rebantur.

11 Avertit ab eis curis senatum Etruriae ingravescens
 bellum et crebrae litterae Appi monentis ne regionis 12 eius motum neglegerent : quattuor gentes conferre arma, Etruscos Samnites Umbros Gallos ; iam castra
 bifariam facta esse, quia unus locus capere tantam 13 multitudinem non possit. Ob haec et—iam² appetebat tempus—comitorum causa L. Volumnius consul Romam revocatus ; qui priusquam ad suffragium
 centurias vocaret, in contionem advocato populo 14 multa de magnitudine belli Etrusci disseruit : iam
 tum cum ipse ibi cum collega rem pariter gesserit, fuisse tantum bellum ut nec duce uno nec exercitu

¹ Vescinum (and in § 8, Vescino) as at chap. xx. § 1.

² et—iam Walters and Conway : et iam Ω : et nam Madrigi :
 et iam enim Weissenborn.

¹ Perhaps situated between Mons Massicus and the sea on the heights of Mondragone.

They next considered how they might protect ^{B.C. 296} the region devastated by the Samnites, and resolved to plant two colonies in the Vescinian and Falernian country, one, which was named Minturnae, at the mouth of the river Liris, the other in the Vescinian forest,¹ hard by the Falernian district, where the Greek city of Sinope is said to have stood, thereafter called Sinuessa by the Roman settlers. The tribunes of the plebs were assigned the task of obtaining a plebiscite directing Publius Sempronius the praetor to appoint three commissioners to conduct the colonists to these places; yet it was not easy to find men who would enroll, since they regarded themselves as sent, not to settle on the land, but to serve almost as a perpetual outpost in a hostile territory.

The senate's attention was diverted from these cares by the growing seriousness of the war in Etruria, and by a succession of dispatches from Appius, in which he warned them not to make light of the disturbance in that region. Four races, he said, were uniting their arms, the Etruscans, Samnites, Umbrians, and Gauls; and they had already divided their camp into two, one place not being able to hold so great a multitude. For these reasons and because of the elections—the time for which was rapidly approaching—the consul Lucius Volumnius was recalled to Rome. Before summoning the centuries to vote, he brought the people together in an assembly, and discoursed at length of the magnitude of the war in Etruria: even earlier, when he himself and his colleague had campaigned there together, the war had been so great that one general and one army could not have conducted it;

A.U.C.
458 geri potuerit; accessisse postea dici Umbros et 15 ingentem exercitum Gallorum; adversus quattuor
populos duces consules illo die deligi meminissent.
Se, nisi confideret eum consensu populi Romani
consulem declaratum iri qui haud dubie tum primus omnium dux habeatur, dictatorem fuisse extemplo 16 dicturum.

A.U.C.
459 XXII. Nemini dubium erat quin Fabius quintum omnium consensu destinaretur; eumque et praerogativa et primo vocatae omnes centuriae consulem 2 cum L. Volumnio dicebant. Fabi oratio fuit qualis biennio ante; deinde, ut vincebatur consensu, versa
3 postremo ad collegam P. Decium poscendum: id senectuti suae adminiculum fore. Censura duobusque consulatibus simul gestis expertum se nihil
concordi collegio firnius ad rem publicam tuendam
esse. Novo imperii socio vix iam adsuescere senilem 4 animum posse; cum moribus notis facilius se communicaturum consilia. Subscripsit orationi eius consul cum meritis P. Deci laudibus, tum quae ex concordia consulum bona quaeque ex discordia mala
in administratione rerum militarium evenirent me-5 morando, quamque¹ prope ultimum discrimen suis et collegae certaminibus nuper ventum foret, admo-6 nendo; Decium Fabiumque uno animo, una mente²

¹ quamque Duker: quam Ω.

² uno . . . vivere Ussing: ut uno . . . uiuerent Ω: qui uno . . . viverent Harant.

¹ The praerogativa were the 18 centuries of knights; the others here referred to were the 80 centuries of the first class, cf. I. xlivi. 11.

but it was said that the Umbrians had since then b.c. 296 been added to the enemy's forces, as well as a huge army of Gauls; they should remember that on that day they were choosing consuls to oppose four peoples; for his own part, were he not confident that the Roman People would unanimously choose for consul the man who was then looked upon as unquestionably the first of all commanders, he would at once have named him dictator.

XXII. No one doubted that Fabius would by the b.c. 295 common voice of all be for the fifth time elected; and in fact the prerogative centuries and all those which were summoned first¹ were naming him consul, together with Lucius Volumnius. Fabius then made a speech, to the same purport as he had done two years before; but, overborne by the general agreement, he ended by requesting that he might have for colleague Publius Decius, who would be a prop to his old age. In the censorship and the two consulships which he had shared with Decius, he had found that nothing more tended to the preservation of the commonwealth than the harmony of colleagues. To a new partner in authority he could now hardly hope to adapt an old man's mind: with one whose character he knew, it would be easier to share his counsels. His plea was seconded by the consul, who bestowed well-merited praise on Publius Decius, and recalling the advantages that accrued from harmony betwixt the consuls to the administration of military measures and the harm that resulted from their discord, reminded his hearers how dire had been the danger occasioned lately by the strife between himself and his colleague. Decius and Fabius, he said, were of one heart and vivere; esse praeterea viros natos militiae, factis magnos, ad verborum linguaeque certamina rudes.

A.U.C.
459

7 Ea ingenia consularia esse: callidos sollertesque, iuris atque eloquentiae consultos, qualis Ap. Claudius esset, urbi ac foro¹ praesides habendos praetoresque
 8 ad reddenda iura creandos esse. His agendis dies est consumptus. Postridie ad praescriptum consulis 9 et consularia et praetoria comitia habita. Consules creati Q. Fabius et P. Decius, Ap. Claudius praetor, omnes absentes; et L. Volumnio ex senatus consulto et scito plebis prorogatum in annum imperium est.

XXIII. Eo anno prodigia multa fuerunt, quorum averruncandorum causa supplicationes in biduum
 2 senatus decrevit; publice vinum ac tus praebitum;²
 3 supplicatum iere frequentes viri feminaeque. Insig-nem supplicationem fecit certamen in sacello Pudicitiae Patriciae, quae in foro Boario est ad aedem 4 rotundam Herculis, inter matronas ortum. Ver-giniam, Auli filiam, patriciam plebeio nuptam, L.
 Volumnio consuli, matronae, quod e patribus enup-sisset, sacris arcuerant. Brevis altercatio inde ex-iracundia muliebri in contentionem animorum ex-

¹ foro F³D³A³: fori (tori M) Ω: fortis A.

² praebitum A²: *prae(or pre-*bituum MPA: *p (or per-*biduum P²FUT²: plebitum TD: plebi tuum L.

¹ Where the law-courts were held.

² Fabius and Decius can only have been absent from the voting place, but Appius was away from Rome.

³ It is likely that the tradition of a shrine to Pudicitia in the Forum Boarium is due to a confusion of this goddess with Fortuna Virgo, who had a chapel there near the temple of Mater Matuta (a birth-goddess), and was, like her, a woman's goddess. Young brides dedicated to her their maiden's dress, on marrying, and the mistake was favoured

one mind, and were, besides, men born for war, ^{B.C. 295} great in their deeds, but unskilled in the strife of words and of the tongue. Theirs were talents meet for the consul's office. But shrewd and clever men, masters of the law and of eloquence, like Appius Claudius, should be had to preside over the City and the Forum,¹ and should be elected praetors to administer justice. With these transactions the day was taken up. On the following day, by the direction of the consul, elections were held both of consuls and of praetors. Quintus Fabius and Publius Decius were chosen consuls and Appius Claudius praetor—all three being absent²—and the senate passed a decree, which the people ratified, prolonging for a year the command of Lucius Volumnius.

XXIII. In that year were many portents, to avert which the senate decreed supplications for two days. Wine and incense were provided by the state, and the people went in throngs to offer their prayers—both men and women. The supplication was rendered memorable by a quarrel that broke out among the matrons in the chapel of Patrician Modesty, which stands in the Cattle Market, by the round temple of Hercules.³ Verginia, Aulus's daughter, a patrician wedded to a commoner, Lucius Volumnius the consul, had been excluded by the matrons from their ceremonies, on the ground that she had married out of the patriciate. This led to a short dispute, which the hot anger of the sex soon kindled to a blaze of passionate contention.

by the unusual circumstance that the image of Fortuna Virgo was veiled. The story preserved by Livy is an attempt to explain the epithet of Pudicitia Plebeia (§ 7). See Wissowa, Religion und Kultus der Römer (1912²), pp. 257, 333.

A.U.C. 5 arsit, cum se Verginia et patriciam et pudicam in 459 ·Patriciae Pudicitiae templum ingressam et uni nuptam ad quem virgo deducta sit, nec se viri honorumve
 eius ac rerum gestarum paenitere, ex vero¹ gloriaretur.
 6 Facto deinde egregio magnifica verba adauxit : in vico Longo, ubi habitabat, ex parte aedium quod satis
 esset loci modico sacello exclusit, aramque ibi posuit
 et convocatis plebeiis matronis conquesta iniuriam
 7 patriciarum " Hanc ego aram " inquit " Pudicitiae
 Plebeiae dedico vosque hortor, ut quod certamen
 8 virtutis viros in hac civitate tenet, hoc pudicitiae inter matronas sit detisque operam ut haec ara
 quam illa, si quid potest, sanctius et a castioribus 9 coli dicatur." Eodem ferme ritu et haec ara quo illa antiquior culta est, ut nulla nisi spectatae pudicitiae matrona et quae uni viro nupta fuisse ius 10 sacrificandi haberet. Volgata dein religio a pollutis,² nec matronis solum sed omnis ordinis feminis, postremo in oblivionem venit.

11 Eodem anno Cn. et Q. Ogulnii aediles curules aliquot 12 feneratoribus diem dixerunt ; quorum bonis multatis ex eo quod in publicum redactum est aenea in Capitolio limina et trium mensarum argentea vasa in cella Iovis Iovemque in culmine cum quadrigis et ad
 ficum Ruminalem simulacra infantium conditorum

¹ ex vero Madrig : uero Ω : uerum A² : vere Douiatius.

² a pollutis Ω : cum pollutis H. J. Mueller : pollutis Duker.

¹ Popular etymology made Ruminalis come from Romularis and that from Romulus. It was in the overflow of the Tiber near this fig-tree that the twins were exposed (I. iv. 5).

Verginia boasted, and with reason, that she had ^{B.C. 295} entered the temple of Patrician Modesty both a patrician and a modest woman, as having been wedded to the one man to whom she had been given as a maiden, and was neither ashamed of her husband nor of his honours and his victories. She then added a noble deed to her proud words. In the Vicus Longus, where she lived, she shut off a part of her mansion, large enough for a shrine of moderate size, and, erecting there an altar, called together the plebeian matrons, and after complaining of the injurious behaviour of the patrician ladies, said, “I dedicate this altar to Plebeian Modesty; and I urge you, that even as the men of our state contend for the meed of valour, so the matrons may vie for that of modesty, that this altar may be said to be cherished—if it be possible—more reverently than that, and by more modest women.” This altar, too, was served with almost the same ritual as that more ancient one, so that no matron but one of proven modesty, who had been wedded to one man alone, should have the right to sacrifice. Afterwards the cult was degraded by polluted worshippers, not matrons only but women of every station, and passed finally into oblivion.

In that same year Gnaeus and Quintus Ogulnius the curule aediles brought a number of usurers to trial, and, confiscating their possessions, employed the share which came into the public treasury to put brazen thresholds in the Capitol, and silver vessels for the three tables in the shrine of Jupiter, and a statue of the god in a four-horse chariot on the roof, and at the fig-tree Ruminalis¹ a representation of the infant Founders of the City being

A.U.C. 459 urbis sub uberibus lupae posuerunt semitamque saxo
 13 quadrato a Capena porta ad Martis straverunt. Et ab aedilibus plebeiis L. Aelio Paeto et C. Fulvio Curvo ex multaticia item pecunia, quam exegerunt pecuariis damnatis, ludi facti pateraeque aureae ad Cereris positae.

XXIV. Q. inde Fabius quintum et P. Decius 2 quartum consulatum ineunt, tribus consulatibus censuraque collegae nec gloria magis rerum, quae ingens erat, quam concordia inter se clari. Quae ne perpetua esset, ordinum magis quam ipsorum inter se certamen intervenisse reor, patriciis tenden- 3 tibus ut Fabius Etruriam¹ extra ordinem provinciam haberet, plebeis auctoribus Decio ut ad sortem rem 4 vocaret.² Fuit certe contentio in senatu et post- quam ibi Fabius plus poterat, revocata res ad popu- lum est. In contione,³ ut inter militares viros et factis potius quam dictis fretos, pauca verba habita. 5 Fabius, quam arborem consevisset,⁴ sub ea legere alium fructum indignum esse dicere;⁵ se aperuisse Ciminiam silvam viamque per devios saltus Romano 6 bello fecisse. Quid se id aetatis sollicitassent, si alio duce gesturi bellum essent? Nimirum adver-

¹ Etruriam ζ : in Etruriam *MPFTLA*²: in eturia U.

² rem vocaret Conway: rem revocaret Listorius: reuocaret Ω .

³ in contione ζ : in contionem *MTA*²: in contentionem PFUDLA.

⁴ consevisset I³F³A²(or A³)Glareanus: conseruisset (-set) et P. Ω .

⁵ dicere A² or A³: diceret Ω .

¹ Convicted probably of using for grazing purposes more of the public domain than they were legally entitled to control.

suckled by the wolf. They also made a paved walk ^{B.C. 295} of squared stone from the Porta Capena to the temple of Mars. And the plebeian aediles Lucius Aelius Paetus and Gaius Fulvius Curvus, likewise with the money from fines, which they exacted from convicted graziers,¹ held games and provided golden bowls for the temple of Ceres.

XXIV. After that Quintus Fabius (for the fifth time) and Publius Decius (for the fourth) began their consulship, having thrice been colleagues ~~in~~ that office and once in the censorship, and being not more distinguished for the renown, great though that was, of their achievements than for their harmonious co-operation. This, however, was not destined to be permanent, though its interruption was due, I think, more to rivalry between the orders than to their own; for the patricians strove that Fabius should have the command in Etruria without drawing lots, and the plebeians insisted that Decius should demand that method of determining the question. At all events there was a contention in the senate, and Fabius proving to be the stronger there, the case was carried before the people. In the assembly the speeches were short, as befitted soldiers and men who trusted more to deeds than to words.

Fabius argued that when one man had planted a tree, it was unfair that another should gather the fruit that dropped from it; it was he that had opened up the Ciminian Forest and had made a path for Roman arms through remote and desert tracts. Why, pray, had they troubled him, old as he was, if they had meant to wage the war with another general? It was only too clear, he said—

sarium se, non socium imperii legisse sensim exprobrat et invidisse Decium concordibus collegiis tribus.
 7 Postremo se tendere nihil ultra quam ut, si dignum provincia ducerent, in eam mitterent: in senatus arbitrio se fuisse et in potestate populi futurum.

P. Decius senatus iniuriam querebatur: quoad 8 potuerint, patres adnisos ne plebeiis¹ aditus ad magnos honores esset; postquam ipsa virtus pervicerit ne in ullo genere hominum inhonorata esset, quaeri quemadmodum irrita sint non suffragia modo populi sed arbitria etiam fortunae et in paucorum 10 potestatem vertantur. Omnes ante se consules sortitos provincias esse: nunc extra sortem Fabio 11 senatum provinciam dare,—si honoris eius causa, ita eum de se deque re publica meritum esse ut faveat Q. Fabi gloriae quae modo non sua contumelia 12 splendeat. Cui autem dubium esse, ubi unum bellum sit asperum ac difficile, cum id alteri extra sortem mandetur, quin alter consul pro supervacaneo atque 13 inutili habeatur? Gloriari Fabium rebus in Etruria gestis: velle et P. Decium gloriari. Et forsitan, quem ille obrutum ignem reliquerit, ita ut totiens novum 14 ex improviso incendium daret, eum se extincturum. Postremo se collegae honores praemiaque conces-taking gradually a more reproachful tone—that he had selected an adversary, not a partner in command, and that Decius had begrimed the friendly spirit in which they had administered three offices together. Finally, he asked no more than that if they thought him worthy of the command they should give it to him; he had submitted to the decision of the senate and would obey the people.

¹ plebeiis (or plebeis) Dx edd.: plebis (plebi A⁴) Ω.

Publius Decius complained of the senate's injustice: as long as they were able, the Fathers had striven to deny the plebeians access to great honours; and since native worth had of its own strength won the right to be recognized in any class of men, they were seeking to make of none effect not only the suffrages of the people but also the awards of Fortune, and to subject them to the control of a few. All the consuls who had preceded him had drawn lots for their commands, but the senate was now conferring a command on Fabius without the lot. If they were doing this to honour him, he would say that the man had deserved so well both of himself and of the state that he stood ready to promote the glory of Fabius, provided only that its lustre were not purchased with insult to himself. But who could doubt, when there was one difficult, dangerous war, and this was entrusted without lots to one of the consuls, that the other was regarded as superfluous and useless? Fabius gloried in his Etruscan victories: Publius Decius would fain glory too. And perhaps that fire which Fabius had left covered up, but so that it was continually breaking out into new flames, might be by him extinguished. In short he was willing, for the reverence he bore his colleague's years and dignity, to yield to him

A.U.C.
459

surum verecundia aetatis eius maiestatisque ; cum periculum, cum dimicatio¹ proposita sit, neque cedere
 sua sponte neque cessurum ; et si nihil aliud ex eo certamine tulerit, illud certe laturum ut quod populi sit populus iubeat potius quam patres gratificen-
 tur. Iovem optimum maximum deosque immortales se precari ut ita sortem aequam sibi cum collegadent si eandem virtutem felicitatemque in bello administrando daturi sint. Certe et id natura aequum et exemplo utile esse et ad famam populi Romani pertinere, eos consules esse quorum utrolibet duce bellum Etruseum geri recte possit.

18 Fabius nihil aliud precatus populum Romanum
 quam ut, priusquam intro vocarentur ad suffragium tribus, Ap. Claudi praetoris allatas ex Etruria litteras audirent, comitio abiit.² Nec minore populi consensu quam senatus provincia Etruria extra sortem Fabio decreta est.

XXV. Concursus inde ad consulem factus omnium ferme iuniorum et pro se quisque nomina dabant ;
 tanta cupido erat sub eo duce stipendia faciendi.
 2 Qua circumfusus turba "Quattuor milia" inquit
 "peditum et sescentos equites dumtaxat scribere in animo est; hodierno et crastino die qui nomina
 3 dederitis mecum ducam. Maiori mihi curae est ut omnes locupletes reducam quam ut multis rem
 4 geram militibus." Profectus apto exercitu et eo

¹ cum dimicatio ζ : tum dimicatio MA^2 : dimicatio Ω .

² comitio abiit A^2 or A^4 : comitio abit ζ : comitia habuit (perhaps abuit A) Ω .

honours and rewards; but when peril, when strife, B.C. 295 was set before them—he yielded not, of his own consent—nor ever would. And if he got nothing else by this contest, one thing at any rate he would get—that what belonged to the people should be disposed of by the people, not bestowed by the Fathers as a favour. To Jupiter Optimus Maximus and the immortal gods he prayed that they would grant him an equal chance in the lot with his colleague only if they were ready to grant him the same courage and the same good fortune in the administration of the war. At least it was a thing in its nature reasonable, in its example salutary, and material to the reputation of the Roman People, that the consuls should be such that the Etruscan war could be managed aright under the leadership of either one of them.

Fabius only prayed the Roman people to listen, before the tribes were called to vote, to a dispatch of Appius Claudius the praetor that had been brought in from Etruria. He then left the comitium, and the people then, as unanimously as the senate had done, decreed that Fabius should have the command in Etruria without drawing lots.

XXV. Nearly all the younger men now flocked about the consul, and each gave in his name, so eager were they to serve under such a captain. Surrounded by this throng he said, “I have in mind to enrol no more than four thousand foot and six hundred horse; I will take with me those of you who give in your names to-day and to-morrow. I am more concerned to bring all my men back with their purses filled than to wage war with many soldiers.” Marching out with a fit army, which was plus fiduciae ac spei gerente quod non desiderata multitudo erat, ad oppidum Aharnam, unde haud procul hostes erant, ad castra Appi praetoris pergit.

A.U.C.
459

5 Paucis citra milibus lignatores ei cum praesidio occurrunt; qui ut lictores praegredi viderunt Fabiumque esse consulem accepere, laeti atque alacres dis populoque Romano grates agunt quod eum sibi
6 imperatorem misissent. Circumfusi deinde cum consulem salutarent, quaerit Fabius quo pergerent, respondentibusque lignatum se ire, "Ain tandem?"
7 inquit, "num castra vallata non habetis?" Ad hoc cum succelamatum esset duplii quidem vallo et fossa et tamen in ingenti metu esse, "Habetis igitur" inquit "adfatim lignorum; redite et vellite vallum."
8 Redeunt in castra terroremque ibi vellentes vallum et iis qui in castris remanserant militibus et ipsi
9 Appio fecerunt; tum pro se quisque alii aliis dicere consulis se Q. Fabi facere iussu. Postero inde die castra mota et Appius praetor Romam dimissus.
10 Inde nusquam stativa Romanis fuere. Negabat utile esse uno loco sedere exercitum; itineribus ac mutatione locorum mobiliorem ac salubriorem esse. Fiebant autem itinera, quanta fieri sinebat hiems haud dūm exacta.

11 Vere inde primo relictā secunda legione ad Clu-

¹ Probably = Arna, across the Tiber from Perusia, and about six miles due east of it.

² sc. for use as firewood.

all the more confident and hopeful because he had ^{B.C. 295} not desired a great host, he took his way towards the town of Aharna,¹ from which the enemy were not far distant, to the camp of Appius the praetor. A few miles this side the camp he encountered some men who had come out with an armed escort to gather wood. These people, seeing the lictors in the van and learning that Fabius was consul, with lively manifestations of satisfaction gave thanks to the gods and to the Roman People for having sent him to be their general. Then, as they trooped about him and hailed him consul, Fabius asked whither they were bound, and they answered that they were come out to get wood. "Is it possible," he cried, "that you have no rampart round your camp?" and, on their shouting back that they had a double rampart and a trench and yet were in mortal fear, "Then you have quite wood enough," said he; "go back and pull up your stockade."² Returning to camp they began pulling up the palings, to the terror of their comrades who had stayed behind, as well as of Appius himself, till the news was spread, as each talked with his neighbours, that they were acting under orders of the consul Quintus Fabius. On the morrow the camp was removed and the praetor Appius was sent away to Rome. Thence-forward the Romans had no permanent camp anywhere. It was of no use, Fabius maintained, for the army to sit down in one place: by marching and shifting its position it grew more mobile and more healthy. The marches, of course, were such as could be made at a season when winter was not yet over.

In the early spring, leaving the second legion in

A.U.C.
459

sium, quod Camars olim appellabant, praepositoque castris L. Scipione pro praetore Romam ipse ad con-sultandum de bello rediit, sive ipse sponte sua, quia bellum ei maius in conspectu erat quam quantum
 esse famae crediderat sive senatus consulto accitus ;
 nam in utrumque auctores sunt. Ab Ap. Claudio praetore retractum quidam videri volunt, cum in senatu et apud populum, id quod per litteras adsidue fecerat, terrorem belli Etrusci augeret : non suffectu-rum ducem unum nec exercitum unum adversus quattuor populos ; periculum¹ esse, sive iuncti unum premant sive diversi gerant bellum, ne ad omnia simul obire unus non possit. Duas se ibi legiones Romanas reliquisse et minus quinque milia peditum equitumque cum Fabio venisse. Sibi placere P.
 Decium consulem primo quoque tempore in Etruriam ad collegam proficisci, L. Volumnio Samnum provinciam dari ; si consul malit in suam provinciam ire, Volumnium in Etruriam ad consulem cum exer-citu iusto consulari proficisci. Cum magnam partem moveret oratio praetoris, P. Decium censuisse ferunt ut omnia integra ac libera Q. Fabio servarentur, donec vel ipse, si per commodum rei publicae posset, Romam venisset vel aliquem ex legatis misisset, a quo disceret senatus quantum in Etruria belli esset

¹ periculum Gronovius: periculos MP: periculosum Ω.

¹ i.e. two Roman legions with the usual complement of cavalry and allies.

the neighbourhood of Clusium—which they used of ^{B.C. 295} old to call Camars—and putting Lucius Scipio, as propraetor, in charge of the camp, Fabius himself returned to Rome to consult about the war, either voluntarily, because he had a task in prospect that was greater than he had believed the reports to signify, or, it may be, summoned by the senate; for both accounts are vouched for. Some would have it appear that he was compelled to return by Appius Claudius the praetor, who continued to exaggerate the perils of the Etruscan war in the senate and before the people, as he had done persistently in his dispatches. It was not enough, he said, to have one commander and one army against four nations: the danger was—whether they united to overwhelm him or campaigned separately—that one man would be incapable of meeting simultaneously all emergencies. He himself had left on the ground two Roman legions, and less than five thousand infantry and cavalry had come with Fabius. It was his opinion that Publius Decius the consul should march at the very earliest moment to Etruria, to join his colleague, and that Lucius Volumnius should be given the command in Samnium; or, if the consul preferred to go out to his own province, that Volumnius should set out for Etruria with a regular consular army.¹ The majority were moved by the praetor's speech, but Publius Decius—so they say—advised that all be left to the free and unhampered judgment of Quintus Fabius, until Fabius should either come to Rome himself—if this were compatible with public policy—or send some one of his lieutenants, to inform the senate how great a war was on foot

quantisque administrandum copiis et quot per duces
esset.

XXVI. Fabius, ut Romam rediit, et in senatu et productus ad populum medium orationem habuit, ut nec augere nec minuere videretur belli famam magisque in altero adsumendo duce aliorum indulgere timori quam suo aut rei publicae periculo con-
2 sulere. Ceterum si sibi adiutorem belli sociumque imperii darent, quonam modo se obliviousi P. Deci 3 consulis per tot collegia experti posse? Neminem omnium secum coniungi malle; et copiarum satis sibi cum P. Decio et nunquam nimium hostium fore; sin collega quid aliud mallet,¹ at sibi L. Volumnium 4 darent adiutorem. Omnium rerum arbitrium et a populo et a senatu et ab ipso collega Fabio permis- sum est; et cum P. Decius se vel in Samnium vel ² in Etruriam proficiisci paratum esse ostendisset, tanta laetitia ac gratulatio fuit ut praeciperetur victoria animis triumphusque non bellum decretum consulibus videretur.

5 Invenio apud quosdam extemplo consulatu inito profectos in Etruriam Fabium Deciumque sine ulla mentione sortis provinciarum certaminumque inter 6 collegas quae exposui. Sunt quibus ne haec quidem in Etruria, and with what forces, commanded by B.C. 295 how many generals, it ought to be conducted.

¹ mallet Weissenborn: mallit Ω: malit P²FUT²D^xA^x.

² vel in Samnium vel H. J. Mueller: in Samnium uel Ω.

XXVI. Fabius, when he returned to Rome, both in the senate and afterwards in speaking to the people, steered a middle course, that he might appear neither to exaggerate the current reports about the war nor minimize them, and in accepting an additional commander to be rather consulting the fears of others than guarding against a danger to himself or the republic. For the rest, if they chose to give him a helper in the war and a partner in authority, how—he asked—could he possibly forget Publius Decius the consul, whom he had proved so often when they had been colleagues? There was no one living with whom he would sooner share his commission; he should have troops enough, if Decius were with him, and his enemies would never be too numerous. But if his colleague preferred some other arrangement, let them give him Lucius Volumnius to be his coadjutor. The decision in regard to everything was left by the people and the senate, and by his colleague himself, entirely to Fabius; and when Publius Decius had made known his readiness to set out either for Samnium or Etruria, there were such rejoicings and congratulations that men tasted the sweets of victory in anticipation, and it seemed as though the consuls had been voted a triumph and not a war.

I find in some historians that Fabius and Decius set out for Etruria at the very beginning of their consulship, and they make no mention of the casting of lots for provinces or of the disputes betwixt the colleagues which I have described. On the other hand, even these disputes have not been enough

certamina exponere satis fuit; adiecerunt¹ et Appi criminationes de Fabio absente ad populum et pertinaciam adversus praesentem consulem praetoris
contentionemque aliam inter collegas, tendente Decio 7 ut suae quisque provinciae sortem tueretur. Con-stare res incipit ex eo tempore quo profecti ambo
consules ad bellum sunt.

Ceterum antequam consules in Etruriam pervenirent, Senones Galli multitudine ingenti ad Clusium venerunt legionem Romanam castraque oppugnaturi.
8 Scipio, qui castris praeerat, loco adiuvandam paucitatem suorum militum ratus, in collem² qui inter 9 urbem et castra erat aciem erexit. Sed, ut in re subita, parum explorato itinere ad iugum perrexit quod hostes ceperant parte alia adgressi. Ita caesa ab tergo legio atque in medio, cum hostis undique 10 urgeret, circumventa. Deletam quoque ibi legio-nem, ita ut nuntius non superesset, quidam auctores 11 sunt, nec ante ad consules, qui iam haud procul a Clusio aberant, famam eius cladis perlatam quam
in conspectu fuere Gallorum equites, pectoribus
equorum suspensa gestantes capita et lanceis infixa 12 ovantesque moris sui carmine. Sunt qui Umbros fuisse non Gallos tradant, nec tantum cladis acceptum et circumventis pabulatoribus cum L. Manlio Torquato legato Scipionem propraetorem subsidium

¹ adiecerunt Heiasins: adiecerint Ω.

² in collem ζ: in colle (cole P) Ω.

¹ Possibly a son of the consul who was thrown from his horse and killed in 299 B.C. See chap. xi. § 1.

for some, but they have added invectives pronounced B.C. 295 by Appius before the people against the absent Fabius, and stubborn opposition on the praetor's part to the consul who was present, and another quarrel between the colleagues, when Decius urged that each should attend to his allotted province. The authorities begin to be in agreement from the moment that both consuls set out for the seat of war.

But before the consuls could reach Etruria, the Senonian Gauls were come with a great multitude to Clusium, to besiege the Roman legion in camp there. Scipio, who was in command, thought it necessary that he should gain the advantage of position to eke out the smallness of his numbers, and marched his troops up a hill situated between the city and his camp; but, as happens in sudden emergencies, he had sent no scouts ahead of him, and led his men up to a ridge which was held by the enemy, who had approached it from another direction. Thus the legion was attacked in the rear and found itself surrounded, with the enemy assailing it from every quarter. Some writers say that the legion was even annihilated there, so that none survived to bear away the tidings, and that the consuls, who were not far from Clusium, got no report of the disaster till some Gallie horsemen came in sight, with heads hanging at their horses' breasts or fixed on their lances, and singing their customary song of triumph. Others allege that they were not Gauls but Umbrians, and that the reverse experienced was not so great. Some foragers, according to their account, under Lucius Manlius Torquatus,¹ a lieutenant, had been cut off, and Scipio the propraetor sallied forth from the

e castris tulisse victoresque Umbros redintegrato
 proelio victos esse captivosque eis ac praedam ademptam. Similius vero est a Gallo hoste quam Umbro eam cladem acceptam, quod cum saepe alias tum eo anno Gallici tumultus praecipuus terror civitatem tenuit. Itaque praeterquam quod ambo consules profecti ad bellum erant cum quattuor legionibus et magno equitatu Romano Campanisque mille equitibus delectis, ad id bellum missis, et sociorum nominisque Latini maiore exercitu quam 15 Romano, alii duo exercitus haud procul urbe Etruriae oppositi, unus in Falisco alter in Vaticano agro.
 Cn. Fulvius et L. Postumius Megellus¹ propraetores ambo, stativa in eis locis habere iussi.

XXVII. Consules ad hostes transgressos Appen-ninum² in agrum Sentinatem pervenerunt. Ibi quattuor milium ferme intervallo castra posita.
 2 Inter hostes deinde consultationes habitae atque
 ita convenit ne unis castris miscerentur omnes
 3 neve in aciem descenderent simul; Samnitibus
 Galli, Etruscis Umbri adiecti. Dies indicta pugnae; Samniti Gallisque delegata pugna; inter ipsum
 certainen Etrusci Umbrique iussi castra Romana
 4 oppugnare. Haec consilia turbarunt transfugae Clusini tres clam nocte ad Fabium consulem transgressi, qui editis hostium consiliis dimissi cum

¹ Megellus Siganus (from chap. xxxii. § 1): megillus megillius A) Ω.

² transgressos Appenninum Gronorius: transgresso Ap-pennino Ω.

camp to their relief, and renewing the battle de- B.C. 295
 feated the victorious Umbrians and took from them their prisoners and their booty. It is more probable that the discomfiture was incurred at the hands of a Gallic than of an Umbrian enemy, since apprehensions of a Gallic rising, which had often at other times troubled the Romans, were in that year particularly alarming. And so, not only did both consuls go out to war, having four legions and a strong body of Roman cavalry, together with a thousand picked horse from Campania—furnished for this campaign—and an army of allies and Latins that outnumbered the Romans; but two other armies were posted over against Etruria, not far from the City, one in the Faliscan district and the other in the Vatican. Gnaeus Fulvius and Lucius Postumius Megellus—propraetors both—were ordered to maintain a standing camp there.

XXVII. The consuls came up with the enemy—who had crossed the Apennines—in the territory round Sentinum, and went into camp about four miles off. Consultations were then held amongst the enemy and they decided not to unite all their forces in one camp nor to give battle all together; to the Samnites were joined the Gauls and to the Etruscans the men of Umbria. A day was designated for the battle, and the Samnites and Gauls were appointed to make the attack; in the midst of the engagement the Etruscans and the Umbrians were to assault the Roman camp. These plans were upset by three Clusinian deserters who came over secretly in the night to Fabius, and having informed him of the enemy's designs were rewarded and sent back again, so that from time to time, as each new

- A.U.C. donis, ut subinde ut quaeque res nova decreta esset 459 5 exploratam perferrent. Consules Fulvio ut ex Falisco, Postumio ut ex Vaticano exercitum ad Clusium admoveant summaque vi fines hostium
 6 depopulentur scribunt. Huius populationis fama Etruscos ex agro Sentineate ad suos fines tuendos movit. Instare inde consules, ut absentibus iis
 7 pugnaretur. Per biduum lacessiere proelio hostem; biduo nihil dignum dictu actum: pauci utrimque cecidere magisque irritati sunt ad iustum certamen animi quam ad discrimen summa rerum adducta.¹ Tertio die descensum in campum omnibus copiis est.
- 8 Cum instructae acies starent, cerva fugiens lupum e montibus exacta per campos inter duas acies decurrit; inde diversae ferae, cerva ad Gallos, lupus ad Romanos cursum deflexit. Lupo data inter 9 ordines via; cervam Galli confixere. Tum ex antesignanis Romanus miles "Illae fuga" inquit "et caedes vertit, ubi sacram Diana feram iacentem videtis; hinc victor Martius lupus, integer et intactus, gentis nos Martiae et conditoris nostri admonuit."
- 10 Dextro cornu Galli, sinistro Samnites constiterunt. Adversus Samnites Q. Fabius primam ac tertiam legionem pro dextro cornu, adversus Gallos pro 11 sinistro Decius quintam et sextam instruxit; secunda

¹ adducta A² (or A⁴): adducti F³: addicta (-dita U) Ω.

¹ See chap. xxiii. § 12 for the bronze group which had recently been erected of the wolf suckling the twins (the Sons of Mars) and cf. the reference at xxii. i. 12 to a statue of Mars and images of wolves (a group?) on the Appian Way. Virgil uses the epithet Martius of the wolf (Aen. ix. 566) and Horace has Martialis lupos, at Carm. i. xvii. 9.

step should be decided on, they might find it out ^{B.C. 295} and report upon it. The consuls wrote to Fulvius and Postumius to march from their respective posts in the Faliscan and Vatican districts to Clusium, and lay waste the territories of the enemy with the utmost rigour. The reports of this devastation drew off the Etruscans from the region of Sentinum to the defence of their own frontiers. Thereupon the consuls strove to bring about an engagement in their absence. For the space of two days they harassed the enemy, but in these two days there was nothing done worth telling : a few were slain on either side and spirits were whetted for a down-right battle, but the main issue was not brought to a decision. On the third day the opposing armies descended in full strength into the field.

As they stood arrayed for battle, a hind, pursued by a wolf that had chased it down from the mountains, fled across the plain and ran between the two lines. They then turned in opposite directions, the hind towards the Gauls, the wolf towards the Romans. For the wolf a passage was opened between the ranks, but the hind was killed by the Gauls. Then one of the front-rankers on the Roman side called out, "That way flight and slaughter have shaped their course, where you see the beast lie slain that is sacred to Diana ; on this side the wolf of Mars, unhurt and sound, has reminded us of the Martian race and of our Founder."¹

On the right wing stood the Gauls, on the left the Samnites. Facing the Samnites, Quintus Fabius drew up the first and third legions, to form the Roman right, while Decius marshalled the fifth and sixth on the Roman left, against the Gauls. The

et quarta cum L. Volumnio proconsule in Samnio gerebant¹ bellum. Primo concursu adeo aequis viribus gesta res est ut si adfuissent Etrusci et Umbri, aut in acie aut in castris, quo cumque se inclinassent accipienda clades fuerit.

XXVIII. Ceterum quanquam communis adhuc Mars belli erat ne cum discrimen Fortuna fecerat qua datura vires esset, haudquaquam similis pugna 2 in dextro laevoque cornu erat. Romani apud Fabium arcebant magis quam inferebant pugnam extrahebaturque in quam maxime serum diei certamen, quia ita persuasum erat duci, et Samnites et Gallos primo impetu feroce esse, quos sustinere satis sit; longiore certamine sensim residere Samnitium animos, Gallorum quidem etiam corpora intolerantissima laboris atque aestus fluere prima eorum proelia plus quam virorum, postrema minus 5 quam feminarum esse. In id tempus igitur quovinci solebat hostis, quam integerrimas vires militi servabat. Ferocior Decius et aetate et vigore animi quantumcumque virium habuit certamine primo effudit. Et quia lentior videbatur pedestris pugna, 7 equitatum in pugnam concitat et ipse fortissimae iuvenum turmae immixtus orat proceres iuventutis in hostem ut secum impetum faciant: duplarem second and the fourth were campaigning in Samnium B.C. 295 under Lucius Volumnius the proconsul. At the first shock the strength put forth on both sides was so equal that if the Etruscans and the Umbrians had been present either in the battle or at the camp, in whichever quarter they had thrown their weight the Romans must have suffered a disaster.

¹ gerebant, : gerebat Ω.

XXVIII. But, though so far it was a doubtful battle and Fortune had given no indication where she intended to bestow her might, the fighting was very different on the right wing from what it was on the left. The Romans with Fabius were rather defending themselves than attacking, and were trying to prolong the struggle to as late an hour in the day as possible. This was because their general was persuaded that both Samnites and Gauls fought fiercely at the outset of an engagement, but only needed to be withheld; when a struggle was prolonged, little by little the spirits of the Samnites flagged, while the physical prowess of the Gauls, who could least of all men put up with heat and labour, ebbed away, and, whereas in the early stages of their battles they were more than men, they ended with being less than women. So until the time should come when the enemy were wont to fail, he was keeping his men as fresh as he could contrive to do. But Decius, with the greater impetuosity of his youth and spirits, expended all the strength he could muster in the first encounter. And because the fighting of the infantry seemed to languish, he called on the cavalry to attack, and attaching himself to the bravest squadron of troopers besought the youthful nobles to join him in a charge. Theirs, he said, would be a double share

A.U.C.
459

- illorum gloriam fore si ab laevo cornu et ab equite
 8 victoria incipiat. Bis avertere Gallicum equitatum; iterum longius evectos et iam inter media peditum¹
 agmina proelium cientes novum pugnae conterruit 9 genus: essedis carrisque superstans armatus hostis ingenti sonitu equorum rotarumque advenit et insolitos² eius tumultus Romanorum conterruit equos.
 10 Ita victorem equitatum velut lymphaticus pavor
 dissipat; sternit inde ruentes equos virosque im-11 provida fuga. Turbata hinc etiam signa legionum multique impetu equorum ac vehiculorum raptorum per agmen obtriti antesignani; et insecura, simul territos hostes vidit, Gallica acies nullum spatium
 respirandi recipiendique se dedit.
 12 Vociferari Decius, quo fugerent quamvis in fuga
 spem haberent; obsistere cedentibus ac revocare
 fusos; deinde, ut nulla vi percussos sustinere poterat, 13 patrem P. Decium nomine compellans "Quid ultra moror" inquit "familiare fatum? Datum hoc nostro generi est ut luendis periculis publicis piacula simus.
 Iam ego mecum hostium legiones mactandas Telluri
 ac dis Manibus dabo."
 14 Haec locutus M. Livium pontificem, quem descendens in aciem digredi vetuerat ab se, praeire

¹ peditum Madvig: equitum (quitum M) Ω.² insolitos ζ: insolitus Ω.

of glory, if victory should come first to the left wing B.C. 295 and to the cavalry. Twice they drove the Gallic cavalry back. The second time they were carried on for a considerable distance and soon found themselves in the midst of the companies of infantry, when they were subjected to a new and terrifying kind of assault; for, standing erect in chariots and waggons, armed enemies came rushing upon them with a mighty clattering of hoofs and wheels, frightening the horses of the Romans with the unfamiliar din. Thus the victorious cavalry were scattered, as if by a panic fit of madness, and, suddenly fleeing, were overthrown, both horse and rider. From them the disorder was communicated to the standards of the legions, and many of the first line were trodden underfoot, as horses and chariots swept through their ranks. No sooner did the Gallic infantry perceive the confusion of their enemies than they charged, without leaving them a moment to recover or regain their breath.

Decius cried out to them to tell him whither they were fleeing, or what hope they had in flight; he endeavoured to stop them as they broke and ran, and to call them back; then, his exertions proving powerless to stay their rout, he cried aloud on the name of his father Publius Decius. "Why," he asked, "do I seek any longer to postpone the doom of our house? It is the privilege of our family that we should be sacrificed to avert the nation's perils. Now will I offer up the legions of the enemy, to be slain with myself as victims to Earth and the Manes."

On going down into the field of battle he had ordered Marcus Livius the pontifex not to leave his side. He now commanded this man to recite before

LIVY

A.U.C. iussit verba quibus se legionesque hostium pro 459 15 exercitu populi Romani Quiritium devoveret. Devotus inde eadem precatione eodemque habitu quo
 pater P. Decius ad Veserim bello Latino se iusserat 16 devoveri, cum secundum sollemnes precationes
 adiecisset prae se agere sese formidinem ac fugam 17 caedemque ac cruorem, caelestium inferorum iras, con-tacturum¹ funebribus diris signa tela arma hostium, locumque eundem suae pestis ac Gallorum ac Sam-18 nitium fore,—haec exsecratus in se hostesque, qua confertissimam cernebat Gallorum aciem concitat equum inferensque se ipse infestis telis est interfectus.

XXIX. Vix humanae inde opis videri pugna potuit.
 Romani duce amisso, quae res terrori alias esse solet,
 sistere fugam ac novam de integro velle instaurare
 2 pugnam: Galli, et maxime globus circumstans consulis corpus, velut alienata mente vana in cassum iactare tela; torpere quidam et nec pugnae memi-3 nisse nec fugae. At ex parte altera pontifex Livius, cui lictores Decius tradiderat iusseratque pro praetore²
 esse, vociferari viciisse Romanos defunctos 4 consulis fato; Gallos Samnitesque Telluris matris ac deorum Manium esse; rapere ad se ac vocare Decium
 devotam secum aciem furiarumque ac formidinis
 5 plena omnia ad hostes esse. Superveniunt deinde

¹ contacturum ζ : contracturum Ω .

² pro praetore ζ : propr. T^2 (or T^1): pro pr. T^3 : $\varphi \bar{p} A^1$?:
 propraetorem (or other corruptions) Ω .

¹ For the details of this earlier devotion consult VIII.
 ix. 12.

him the words with which he proposed to devote B.C. 295 himself and the enemy's legions in behalf of the army of the Roman People, the Quirites. He was then devoted with the same form of prayer and in the same habit his father, Publius Decius, had commanded to be used, when he was devoted at the Veseris, in the Latin war¹; and having added to the usual prayers that he was driving before him fear and panic, blood and carnage, and the wrath of gods celestial and gods infernal, and should blight with a curse the standards, weapons and armour of the enemy, and that one and the same place should witness his own destruction and that of the Gauls and Samnites,—having uttered, I say, these imprecations upon himself and the enemy, he spurred his charger against the Gallic lines, where he saw that they were thickest, and hurling himself against the weapons of the enemy met his death.

XXIX. From that moment the battle seemed scarce to depend on human efforts. The Romans, after losing their general—an occurrence that is wont to inspire terror—fled no longer, but sought to redeem the field; the Gauls, and especially the press about the body of the consul, as though deprived of reason, were darting their javelins at random and without effect, while some were in a daze, and could neither fight nor run away. But in the other army the pontifex Livius, to whom Decius had handed over his lictors, bidding him act as propraetor, cried aloud that the Romans had won the victory, being quit of all danger by the consul's doom. The Gauls, he said, and the Samnites were made over to Mother Earth and to the Manes; Decius was haling after him their devoted host and calling it to join him, and with the enemy all was madness and despair. While the his restituentibus pugnam L. Cornelius Scipio et C. Marcius cum subsidiis ex novissima acie iussu Q. Fabi consulis ad praesidium collegae missi. Ibi auditur P. Deci eventus, ingens hortamen ad omnia pro re publica audienda. Itaque cum Galli structis ante se scutis conferti starent nec facilis pede conlato videretur pugna, iussu legatorum collecta humi pila quae strata inter duas acies iacebant atque in testudinem hostium coniecta; quibus plerisque in scuta rarisque¹ in corpora ipsa fixis sternitur cuneus ita ut magna pars integris corporibus attoniti considerent. Haec in sinistro cornu Romanorum fortuna variaverat. •

Fabius in dextro primo, ut ante dictum est, cunctando extraxerat diem; dein, postquam nec clamor hostium nec impetus nec tela missa eandem vim habere visa, praefectis equitum iussis ad latus Samnitium circumducere alas, ut signo dato in transversos quanto maximo possent impetu incurrerent, sensim suos signa inferre iussit et commovere hostem. Postquam non resisti vidit et haud dubiam lassitudinem esse, tum collectis omnibus subsidiis, quae ad id tempus reservaverat, et legiones concitavit et signum ad invadendos hostes equitibus dedit. Nec sustinuerunt Samnites impetum praeterque aciem ipsam

¹ rarisque (or rarisi) Hertz: uerarisque rutis MTDLA: uerutis U: uerutis PF: uerutisque ꝝ: plerisque uerutus A⁴ꝝ: uerutisque rarisi Walters and Conway (rarisque verutis Drakenborch).

¹ Testudo, “tortoise,” was the name given to a formation in which the shields were held so close together as to form a sort of pent-house or shell over the soldiers.

Romans were restoring the battle, up came Lucius Cornelius Scipio and Gaius Marcius, whom Quintus Fabius the consul had ordered to take reserves from the rearmost line and go to his colleague's support. There they learned of Decius's death, a great incentive to dare everything for the republic. And so, though the Gauls stood crowded together with their shields interlocked in front of them, and it looked no easy battle at close quarters, the lieutenants bade their men gather up the javelins that were scattered about on the ground between the hostile lines and cast them against the *testudo*¹ of their enemies; and as many of these missiles stuck fast in the shields and now and then one penetrated a soldier's body, their phalanx was broken up—many falling, though unwounded, as if they had been stunned. Such were the shifts of Fortune upon the Roman left.

On the right, Fabius had begun, as has been said before, by holding back and delaying the decision; later, when neither the shouts of the foe, nor their assaults, nor the missiles they discharged, seemed to have any longer the same force, he ordered the praefects of the cavalry to lead their squadrons round the wing of the Samnites, that, on the signal being given, they might attack them in the flank with all possible vigour, and commanded his own men to push forward by degrees and dislodge the enemy. When he saw that they made no resistance and there could be no question of their weariness, he gathered up all the troops which he had hitherto held in reserve, and, sending in his legions, made a signal to the cavalry to charge. The Samnites could not withstand their onset and fled in confusion past the Gallic line itself, abandon-

Gallorum relictis in dimicazione sociis ad castra effuso 12 cursu ferebantur: Galli testudine facta conferti stabant. Tum Fabius audita morte collegae Campano-rum alam, quingentos fere equites, excedere acie iubet
 et circumvectos ab tergo Gallicam invadere aciem; 13 tertiae deinde legionis subsequi principes, et qua-turbatum agmen hostium viderent impetu equitum, 14 instare ac territos caedere. Ipse aedem Iovi Victori spoliaque hostium cum vovisset, ad castra Samnitium
 perrexit, quo multitudo omnis consternata agebatur.
 15 Sub ipso vallo, quia tantam multitudinem portae non recepere, temptata ab exclusis turba suorum pugna-16 est; ibi Gellius Egnatius, imperator Samnitium, cecidit. Compulsi deinde intra vallum Samnites parvoque certamine capta castra et Galli ab tergo 17 circumventi. Caesa eo die hostium viginti quinque milia, octo capta. Nec incruenta victoria fuit; 18 nam ex P. Deci exercitu caesa septem milia, ex Fabi mille septingenti.¹ Fabius dimissis ad quaerendum collegae corpus spolia hostium coniecta in acervum 19 Iovi Victori cremavit. Consulis corpus eo die, quia obrutum superstratis Gallorum cumulis erat, inveniri
 non potuit: postero die inventum relatumque est

¹ septingenti A⁶Drakenborch: acc MPUTL: ac. c. FT²:
 ·a· cc DA: ac ducenti 5.

B.C. 295

ing their comrades in the midst of the fighting and seeking refuge in their camp. The Gauls had formed a testudo and stood there closely packed together. Then Fabius, who had learned of his colleague's death, commanded the squadron of Campanians, about five hundred lances, to withdraw from the line, and fetching a compass, assail the Gallic infantry in the rear; these the principes, or middle line, of the third legion were to follow, and, pushing in where they saw that the cavalry charge had disordered the enemy's formation, make havoc of them in their panic. He himself, after vowing a temple and the enemy's spoils to Jupiter Victor, kept on to the Samnite camp, whither the whole affrighted throng was being driven. Under the very rampart, since the gates could not receive so great a multitude, those who were shut out by the crowding of their fellows attempted some resistance; there Gellius Egnatius, the commander-in-chief of the Samnites, fell; in the upshot the Samnites were driven within the rampart and after a short struggle their camp was taken and the Gauls were cut off in the rear. There were slain that day five-and-twenty thousand of the enemy, and eight thousand were captured; nor was it a bloodless victory; for of the army of Publius Decius seven thousand were slain and seventeen hundred of the army of Fabius. Fabius sent out men to search for the body of his colleague, and, piling up the spoils of the enemy, burned them in sacrifice to Jupiter the Victor. The consul's body could not be found that day, having been buried under heaps of Gauls who had been slain above him; on the day after, it was found and brought in, amidst the lamentations of the

A.U.C. 20 cum multis militum lacrimis. Intermissa inde 459 omnium aliarum rerum cura Fabius collegae funus
 omni honore laudibusque meritis celebrat.

XXX. Et in Etruria per eosdem dies ab Cn. Fulvio propraetore res ex sententia gesta et praeter ingentem inlatam populationibus agrorum hosti
 2 cladem pugnatum etiam egregie est Perusinorumque et Clusinorum caesa amplius milia tria et signa
 3 militaria ad viginti capta. Samnitium agmen cum per Paelignum agrum fugeret, circumventum a Paelignis est: ex milibus quinque ad mille caesi.

4 Magna eius diei quo in Sentinati agro bellatum
 5 fama est, etiam vero stanti; sed superiecere quidam augendo fidem, qui in hostium exercitu peditum sexiens centena milia,¹ equitum sex et quadraginta milia, mille carpentorum scripsere fuisse, scilicet cum
 6 Umbris Tuscisque, quos et ipsos pugnae adfuisse; et ut Romanorum quoque augerent copias, L. Volumnium pro consule ducem consulibus exercitumque
 7 eius legionibus consulum adiciunt. In pluribus annalibus duorum ea consulum propria victoria est, Volumnius in Samnio interim res gerit Samnitiumque exercitum in Tifernum montem compulsum, non deterritus iniuitate loci, fundit fugatque.

8 Q. Fabius, Deciano exercitu relichto in Etruriae praesidio, suis legionibus deductis ad urbem de Gallis Etruscisque ac Samnitibus triumphavit.

¹ sexiens centena milia Walters (deciens centena milia Niebuhr): x. ccxxx M : xi. ccxxx PFU: (i.e. XL) XL¹ (or XL) ccxxx DLA: quadraginta milia trecentos triginta (tricentos triginta milia T) T².

soldiers. Postponing his concern for everything else, ^{B.C. 295} Fabius celebrated the funeral of his colleague with every show of honour and well-merited eulogiums.

XXX. In Etruria too at the same time Gnaeus Fulvius the propraetor was succeeding according to his wishes, and, besides the enormous damage which his forays inflicted on the enemy, fought also a victorious battle with them. The Perusini and Clusini lost upwards of three thousand men, and some twenty military standards were captured from them. The Samnite army, as it fled through the Paelignian territory, was surrounded by the inhabitants, and of five thousand men about a thousand were slain.

Great is the glory of that day on which the battle was fought in the district of Sentinum, even if a man hold fast to truth; but some writers have so exaggerated as to over-shoot the credible, and have written that in the army of the enemy—including, of course, the Umbrians and Tuscans, for these, too, were present in the battle—there were six hundred thousand infantry, forty-six thousand horse, and a thousand cars; and, to enlarge in like manner the forces of the Romans, they add to the consuls as a general Lucius Volumnius the proconsul, and his army to their legions. In the majority of histories this victory is reserved to the two consuls, and Volumnius is waging war at the same time in Samnium, where, having driven the Samnite army up Mount Tifernus, he routs and scatters them, undeterred by the difficulties of the ground.

Quintus Fabius, leaving the Decian army on guard over Etruria, led down his own legions to Rome and triumphed over the Gauls, the Etruscans, and the

A.U.C. 9 Milites triumphantem secuti sunt. Celebrata inconditis militaribus non magis victoria Q. Fabi quam mors paeclaris P. Deci est, excitataque memoria parentis, aequata eventu publico privatoque, filii 10 laudibus. Data ex praeda militibus aeris octogenibini sagaque et tunicae, praemia illa tempestate militiae haudquaquam spernenda.

XXXI. His ita rebus gestis nec in Samnitibus adhuc nec in Etruria pax erat; nam et Perusinis auctoribus post deductum ab consule exercitum 2 rebellatum fuerat et Samnites praedatum in agrum Vescinum¹ Formianumque et parte alia in Aesernium² quaeque Volturno adiacent flumini descendere. 3 Adversus eos Ap. Claudius praetor cum exercitu Deciano missus. Fabius in Etruria rebellante denuo quattuor milia et quingentos Perusinorum occidit, cepit ad mille septingentos quadraginta, qui redempti 4 singuli aeris trecentis decem; praeda alia omnis militibus concessa. Samnitium legiones, cum partem Ap. Claudius praetor partem L. Volumnius pro consule sequeretur, in agrum Stellatem convenerunt. Ibi ad Caiatiam omnes³ considunt et Appius Volumniusque 6 castra coniungunt. Pugnatum infestissimis animis, hinc ira stimulante adversus rebellantes totiens,

¹ Vescinum Sigonius (cf. chap. xx. § 1): uestinum Ω.

² Aeserninium Gronorius: aesernium MA³: aeserunium PFUT: aes (or es)-jetrunium DLA.

³ ad Caiatiam omnes Conway: ad Samnitium omnes PF: ad Samnium omnes U: et Samnitium omnes MTDLA: et Samnitium legiones A⁶: et Samnitium legiones omnes ꝝ: et Samnitium omnes copiae Madrig.

Samnites. The soldiers followed his triumphal chariot and in their rude verses celebrated no less the glorious death of Publius Decius than the victory of Fabius, reviving by their praise of the son the memory of the father, whose death (and its service to the commonwealth) had now been matched. Every soldier received from the spoils a present of eighty-two asses of bronze, with a cloak and tunic, a reward for military service in those days far from contemptible.

XXXI. Despite these victories, there was not yet peace either with the Samnites or in Etruria; for war had broken out afresh at the instigation of the Perusini, after the consul had withdrawn his army, and the Samnites were raiding the lands of Vescini and of Formiae on the one hand, and on the other the territory of Aesernia and the region adjacent to the Volturnus river. Against these the praetor Appius Claudius was dispatched with the army that Decius had commanded. Fabius dealt with the new outbreak in Etruria, where he slew four thousand five hundred of the Perusini and took one thousand seven hundred and forty prisoners, who were ransomed at three hundred and ten asses each, the rest of the booty being made over to the soldiers. The Samnite levies, of whom a part were being pursued by Appius Claudius the praetor and a part by Lucius Volumnius the pro-consul, effected a junction in the Stellate district, where they all took up a position near Caiatia. Appius and Volumnius also combined their forces. The ensuing battle was very bitterly contested, the Romans being incited by resentment against a people who had so often rebelled, while those on the other side were staking their last hopes

- A.U.C. 459
- 7 illinc ad ultimam iam dimicantibus spem. Caesa ergo Samnitum sedecim milia trecenti, capta duo milia septingenti; ex Romano exercitu cecidere duo milia septingenti.
- 8 Felix annus bellicis rebus, pestilentia gravis prodigiisque sollicitus; nam et terra¹ multifariam pluvisse et in exercitu Ap. Claudi plerosque fulminibus ictos nuntiatum est, librique ob haec aditi. Eo anno Q. Fabius Gурges, consulis filius, aliquot matronas ad populum stupri damnatas pecunia multavit; ex quo multatio aere Veneris aedem quae prope circum est faciendam curavit.
- 10 Supersunt etiam nunc Samnitum bella, quae continua per quartum iam volumen annumque sextum et quadragensimum a M. Valerio A. Cornelio consulibus,² qui primi Samnio arma intulerunt, agimus. Et ne tot annorum clades utriusque gentis laboresque actos nunc referam, quibus nequiverint 12 tamen dura illa pectora vinci, proximo anno Samnites in Sentinati agro, in³ Paelignis, ad Tifernum, Stellatibus campis, suis ipsi legionibus mixti alienis, ab quattuor exercitibus, quattuor ducibus Romanis 13 caesi fuerant; imperatorem clarissimum gentis suae amiserant; socios belli, Etruscos Umbros Gallos, in 14 eadem fortuna videbant qua ipsi erant; nec suis nec

¹ terra ζ (cf. III. x. 6 and VII. xxviii. 7): terram Ω .

² consulibus A^2 (or A^4): consule Ω .

³ agro, in Luterbacher: agro Ω : agros PF.

¹ Fabius was presumably an aedile (cf. chap. xxiii. § 11 and chap. xxxiii. § 9). We learn from Servius, the commentator on Virgil, that the goddess was worshipped as Venus Obscurans (ad Aen. I. 720).

² i.e. the mountain of that name; or perhaps Livy means the town, Tifernum.

on the conflict. The Samnites accordingly lost sixteen thousand three hundred slain and two thousand seven hundred captured; in the Roman army two thousand seven hundred fell.

The year, though one of success in war, was saddened by a pestilence and vexed with prodigies. Showers of earth were reported to have fallen in many places, and it was said that in the army of Appius Claudius many had been struck by lightning. On account of these signs the Sibylline books were consulted. In this year Quintus Fabius Gurges, the consul's son, assessed a fine of money against a number of married women who were convicted before the people of adultery, and with this money erected the temple of Venus which is near the Circus.¹

There are more Samnite wars still to come, though we have dealt with them continuously throughout four books, covering a period of forty-six years, from the consulship of Marcus Valerius and Aulus Cornelius, who were the first that made war on Samnium: and—not to go over now the disasters sustained in so many years on either side and the toils endured, by which nevertheless those sturdy hearts could not be daunted—in the year just past the Samnites had fought in the territory of Sentinum, in the Pelignian country, at Tifernus,² and in the Stellate plains, now by themselves, with their own levies, now in company with troops from other nations, and had been cut to pieces by four armies under four Roman generals: they had lost their nation's most distinguished commander; they beheld their comrades in war, the Etruscans, Umbrians, and Gauls, in the same plight as their own; nor could they longer maintain themselves, either by their own resources

LIVY

A.U.C.
459

externis viribus iam stare poterant ; tamen bello non abstinebant. Adeo ne infeliciter quidem defensae libertatis taedebat et vinci quam non temptare
 15 victoram malebant. Quinam sit ille, quem pigeat longinquitatis bellorum scribendo legendoque, quae gerentes non fatigaverunt ?

A.U.C.
460

XXXII. Q. Fabium P. Decium L. Postumius Megellus¹ et M. Atilius Regulus consules secuti
 2 sunt. Samnium ambobus decreta provincia est, quia tres scriptos hostium exercitus, uno Etruriam, altero populationes Campaniae repeti, tertium tuendis
 3 parari finibus, fama erat. Postumium valetudo adversa Romae tenuit ; Atilius extemplo profectus, ut in Samnio hostes—ita enim placuerat patribus—
 4 nondum egressos opprimeret. Velut ex composito ibi obvium habuere hostem ubi et vastare ipsi Samnitum agrum prohiberentur et egredi inde in pacata sociorumque populi Romani fines Samnitem
 5 prohiberent. Cum castra castris conlata essent, quod vix Romanus totiens victor auderet ausi Samnites sunt—tantum desperatio ultima temeritatis facit—castra Romana oppugnare ; et quamquam non venit ad finem tam audax inceptum, tamen haud
 6 omnino vanum fuit. Nebula erat ad multum diei densa adeo ut lucis usum eriperet non prospectu

¹ Megellus (megallus T) Ω : megillus F³ (cf. chap. xxvi. § 15).

¹ Livy seems to forget that the fighters were now and then relieved.

or by those of outside nations; yet would they not ^{B.C. 295} abstain from war;—so far were they from wearying of a liberty which they had unsuccessfully defended, preferring rather to be conquered than not to try for victory. Who, pray, could grudge the time for writing or reading of these wars, when they could not exhaust the men who fought them?¹

XXXII. Quintus Fabius and Publius Decius were ^{B.C. 294} succeeded in the consulship by Lucius Postumius Megellus and Marcus Atilius Regulus. Samnium was assigned them both for their province, in consequence of a report that the enemy had raised three armies, with one of which they meant to return into Etruria, with another to resume the devastation of Campania, while the third was making ready for the defence of their frontiers. Postumius was detained in Rome by ill health: Atilius marched out at once, that he might put down the enemy in Samnium—for such was the senate's plan—ere they could cross the border. As though it had been prearranged, they encountered the foe in a place where they themselves were prevented from laying waste the territory of their enemies, while they prevented the Samnites from coming out into the district which had been pacified and the territory of the allies of the Roman People. On the camps being established over against each other, what the Romans would hardly have dared to do, victorious as they had so often been, the Samnites ventured—such temerity does utter hopelessness beget,—that is, to assault the enemy's camp; and although their desperate enterprise did not fully succeed, still, it was not altogether futile. There was a fog which lasted well on into the day, so dense as to shut out the light and

A.D.C.
460

modo extra vallum adempto sed propinquo etiam
 7 congreidentium inter se conspectu. Hac velut latebra insidiarum freti Samnites vixdum satis certa
 luce et eam ipsam premente caligine ad stationem Romanam in porta segniter agentem vigilias per-8 veniunt. Improviso oppressis nec animi satis ad resistendum nec virium fuit. Ab tergo castrorum 9 decumana porta impetus factus; itaque captum quaestorium quaestorque ibi L. Opimius Pansa occisus. Conclamatum inde ad arma.

XXXIII. Consul tumultu excitus cohortes duas sociorum, Lucanam Suessanamque, quae proximae
 forte erant, tueri praetorium iubet; manipulos
 2 legionum principali via inducit. Vixdum satis aptatis armis in ordines eunt et clamore magis quam oculis hostem noseunt nec quantus numerus sit 3 aestimari potest. Cedunt primo incerti fortunae suae et hostem introrsum in media castra accipiunt;
 inde, cum consul vociferaretur, expulsine extra 4 vallum castra deinde sua oppugnaturi essent,¹ clamore sublato conixi primo resistunt, deinde
 inferunt pedem urgentque et impulsos semel terrore
 eodem quo² cooperunt expellunt extra portam
 5 vallumque. Inde pergere ac persequi, quia turbida lux metum circa insidiarum faciebat, non ausi,

¹ essent, — Duker : Walters, Class. Quart., 12 (1918) p. 113)
 essent rogitans Ω.

² eodem quo Madrig: eodem agunt (or cogunt) quo Ω.

¹ Situated behind the praetorium (headquarters) and between it and the decuman gate.

² A wide street parallel with the front and rear lines of the camp, at either end of which was a gate—the porta principalis dextra and porta principalis sinistra respectively.

render it impossible to see, not only beyond the rampart, but even at a little way off, when people approached each other. Relying on this, as on a screen for their operations, the Samnites came up, when day had scarcely dawned, and even so was hidden behind the murk, to the Roman outpost that was negligently standing guard before the gate. Falling upon them unawares they encountered neither courage nor strength sufficient to hold them in check. They charged in by the decuman gate in the rear of the camp, captured the quaestor's tent,¹ and slew the quaestor, Lucius Opimius Pansa; whereupon a general alarm was cried.

XXXIII. The consul, aroused by the din, commanded the two allied cohorts which happened to be nearest—those from Lucania and Suessa—to guard headquarters, and put himself at the head of the legionary maniples in the via principalis.² The men fell in ere they had fairly fitted on their armour, and, knowing the enemy more by their shouting than by the sight of them, were unable to form any estimate of their numbers. At first they gave ground, uncertain how fortune stood with them, and admitted the foe into the middle of the camp: then, on the consul's asking them whether they meant to be driven without the wall and afterwards make an assault on their own camp, they gave a cheer, and, exerting themselves, first made a successful stand, and afterwards pushed forward and forced their enemies back, and, having once repulsed them, left them no time to recover their first dismay, but thrust them out of gate and rampart. Not venturing then to go on and pursue them, since the dim light made them fear an ambush, they retired—content to have

LIVY

A.D.C.
460

liberatis castris contenti receperunt se intra vallum
 6 trecentis ferme hostium occisis. Romanorum stationis primae ¹ et eorum qui circa quaestorium oppressi periere ad septingentos ² triginta.

7 Animos inde Samnitibus non infelix audacia auxit et non modo proferre inde castra Romanum sed ne
 pabulari quidem per agros suos patiebantur; retro
 in pacatum Soranum agrum pabulatores ibant.

8 Quarum rerum fama, tumultuosior etiam quam res
 erant, perlata Romam coegit L. Postumium consulem 9 vixdum validum proficisci ex urbe. Prius tamen quam exiret, militibus edicto Soram iussis convenire
 ipse aedem Victoriae, quam aedilis curulis ex multa-10 ticia pecunia faciendam curaverat, dedicavit. Ita ad exercitum profectus, ab Sora in Samnium ad castra collegae perrexit. Inde postquam Samnites diffisi-duobus exercitibus resisti posse recesserunt, diversi consules ad vastandos agros urbesque oppugnandas discedunt.

XXXIV. Postumius Milioniam oppugnare adortus
 vi ³ primo atque impetu, dein, postquam ea parum procedebant, opere ac vineis demum iniunctis muro-2 cepit. Ibi capta iam urbe ab hora quarta usque ad octavam fere horam omnibus partibus urbis diuincerto eventu pugnatum est; postremo potitur

¹ primae Conway: primae uigilumque (or uigiliumque oruiciumque or uiiumque) Ω.

² septingentos edd. : acc (for DCC) or other corruptions Ω.

³ vi - : ut PFUT : omitted by MDLA.

¹ Probably on the Palatine, since Livy mentions a shrine of Victory as being there at xxix. xiv. 13.

² An unidentified Samnite city.

cleared their camp—within the palisade, having ^{B.C. 294} slain about three hundred of the enemy. The Roman loss, at the outpost and amongst those who were taken by surprise at the quaestor's tent, was some seven hundred and thirty.

This bold and not unsuccessful venture of the Samnites raised their spirits; and not only would they not permit the Romans to go forward, but they would not even permit them to forage in their fields; the foragers fell back on the peaceful territory about Sora. The rumour of these events—more startling even than the events themselves—being brought to Rome compelled the consul Lucius Postumius, though barely recovered, to take the field. But after issuing a proclamation calling upon his soldiers to assemble at Sora, he himself, before leaving the City, dedicated a shrine to Victory, which he had built,¹ as curule aedile, with money received from fines. Having then set out to join the army, he led it from Sora to his colleague's camp in Samnium. The Samnites then retreated, having no confidence in their ability to resist two armies, and the consuls separated and marched in different directions to waste their fields and attack their cities.

XXXIV. Postumius essayed to capture Milionia.² Unsuccessful in his first attempt to storm the place, he proceeded against it by regular approaches, and, having brought his pent-houses into contact with the walls, effected an entrance. Thereupon, though the city was already taken, there ensued in every quarter without interruption, from the fourth hour till about the eighth, a desperate struggle, the result of which was long in doubt. At last the

LIVY

A.U.C. 3 oppido Romanus. Samnitium caesi tria milia ducenti, 460 capti quattuor milia septingenti¹ praeter praedam aliam.

4 Inde Feritrum ductae legiones, unde oppidani
 omnibus rebus suis quae ferri agique potuerunt nocte
 5 per aversam portam silentio excesserunt. Igitur, simul advenit consul, primo ita compositus instruc-
 tusque moenibus successit, tamquam idem quod ad 6 Milioniam fuerat certaminis foret; deinde, ut silen-tium vastum in urbe nec arma nec viros in turribus
 ac muris vidiit, avidum invadendi deserta moenia militem detinet, ne quam occultam in fraudem in-7 cautus rueret; duas turmas sociorum Latini nominis
 circumequitare moenia atque explorare omnia iubet.
 Equites portam unam alteramque eadem regione in propinquo patentes conspiciunt itineribusque iis 8 vestigia nocturnae hostium fugae. Adequitant deinde sensim portis urbemque ex tuto rectis itineribus perviam conspiciunt et consuli² referunt excessum urbe; solitudine haud dubia id perspicuum esse et recentibus vestigiis fugae ac strage rerum in trepi-9 datione nocturna relictarum passim. His auditis consul ad eam partem urbis quam adierant equites circumducit agmen. Constitutis haud procul porta

¹ septingenti A⁶ Drakenborch: acc (or other corruptions) Ω.

² et consuli ꝝ: et coīs (or other corruptions) Ω.

¹ Otherwise unknown.

Romans made themselves masters of the place. B.C. 294
The Samnites lost three thousand two hundred slain and four thousand seven hundred captured, besides other booty.

From there the legions were led to Feritrum,¹ which the townspeople, with all their possessions which they could carry or drive away, evacuated in the silence of the night, by the opposite gate. So, then, the consul was no sooner come than he advanced up to the walls with all the order and circumspection of one who looked for the same resistance that he had met with at Milionia; but afterwards, finding the city as silent as a desert and neither arms nor men upon the battlements and towers, he restrained his soldiers, who were eager to scale the abandoned walls, lest they should rush improvidently into some hidden trap. He ordered two squadrons of Latin allies to make a circuit of the fortifications and effect a thorough reconnaissance. The troopers discovered a wide-open gate, and near it in the same quarter another one, and saw in the roads leading out of them the traces of the enemy's nocturnal flight. Riding up then slowly and cautiously to the gates, they saw that the city could be safely traversed by streets that led straight through it, and reported to the consul that it had been abandoned. This was evident, they said, from the unmistakable solitude and the fresh signs of flight and the objects that lay scattered about where they had been discarded in the confusion of the darkness. On receiving this account, the consul led his army round to that side of the city which the horsemen had approached. Halting the troops not far from the gate, he commanded

LIVY

A.U.C.
460

signis quinque equites iubet intrare urbem et modicum spatium progressos tres manere eodem loco, si
 10 tuta videantur, duos explorata ad se referre. Qui ubi redierunt rettuleruntque eo se progressos unde in omnes partes circumspectus esset longe lateque
 11 silentium ac solitudinem vidiisse, exemplo consul cohortes expeditas in urbem induxit, ceteros interim
 12 castra communire iussit. Ingressi milites refractis foribus paucos graves aetate aut invalidos inveniunt
 13 relictaque quae migratu difficultia essent. Ea direpta; et cognitum ex captivis est communi consilio aliquot circa urbes conseisse fugam: suos prima vigilia profectos; credere eandem in aliis urbibus solitudinem
 14 inventuros. Dictis captivorum fides exstitit, desertis oppidis consul potitur.

XXXV. Alteri consuli M. Atilio nequaquam tam facile bellum fuit. Cum ad Luceriam duceret legiones, quam oppugnari ab Samnitibus audierat, ad finem Lucerinum ei hostis obvius fuit. Ibi ira
 2 vires aequavit; proelium varium et anceps fuit, tristius tamen eventu Romanis, et quia insueti erant vinci et quia digredientes magis quam in ipso certamine senserunt quantum in sua parte plus volnerum

five horsemen to enter and advance for a short B.C. 294 distance; then, if all seemed safe, three of these were to remain there together, and the other two were to report to him what they had found. When they came back and reported that they had advanced to a place from which a view could be had in all directions, and that silence and solitude reigned far and wide, the consul at once led some light-armed cohorts into the city and ordered the rest to construct a camp in the meanwhile. Having entered the place and broken in the house-doors, the soldiers discovered some few decrepit or bed-ridden people and certain things abandoned as too difficult to remove. These things were seized. It was learned from the prisoners that a number of communities in the vicinity had agreed together in planning flight; their own people had left in the first watch; they believed that the Romans would find the same solitude in the other cities. The statements of the prisoners turned out to be true, and the consul took possession of the deserted towns.

XXXV. The other consul, Marcus Atilius, had by no means so easy a war. He was marching, at the head of his legions, towards Luceria, which he had heard was being besieged by the Samnites, when the enemy met him at the Lucerine frontier. On this occasion rage made their strength as great as his, and the battle was one of shifting fortunes and doubtful issue. Yet its outcome was more discouraging to the Romans, both as having been unaccustomed to defeat, and because, as they were retiring from the field, they could see, even better than during the actual engagement, how much their side had got the worst of it in killed and wounded.

A.U.C. 3 ac caedis fuisse. Itaque is terror in castris ortus, 460 qui si pugnantes cepisset, insignis accepta clades
 foret; tum quoque sollicita nox fuit iam invasurum castra Samnitum credentibus aut prima luce cum victoribus conserendas manus.

4 Minus cladis ceterum non plus animorum ad hostes erat. Ubi primum inluxit, abire sine certamine cupiunt; sed via una et ea ipsa praeter hostes erat,
 qua ingressi praebuere speciem recta tendentium ad
 5 castra oppugnanda. Consul arma capere milites iubet et sequi se extra vallum; legatis tribunis praefectis sociorum imperat quod apud quemque facto opus est.
 6 Omnes adfirmant se quidem omnia facturos, sed militum iacere animos; tota nocte inter volnera et 7 gemitus morientium vigilatum esse; si ante lucem
 ad castra ventum foret, tantum pavoris fuisse ut relicturi signa fuerint; nunc pudore a fuga contineri, alioqui pro victis esse.

8 Quae ubi consul accepit, sibimet ipsi circumeundos
 adloquendosque milites ratus, ut ad quosque venerat, 9 cunctantes arma capere increpabat: quid cessarent tergiversarenturque? Hostem in castra venturum nisi illi extra castra exissent, et pro tentoriis suis pugnaturos si pro vallo nollent. Armatis ac dimi-

The consequence of this was such a panic in the camp as, had it come over them whilst they were fighting, must have led to a signal overthrow.^{B.C. 294} Even so the night was an anxious one, for they thought that the Samnites would soon be attacking the camp, or else that they would have to fight their victorious enemy at break of day.

The enemy had suffered less, but was not less faint-hearted. As soon as it grew light they wished to retire without giving battle. But there was only one road, and this led past their enemies, and when they had started to go that way, they looked as if marching straight to attack the camp. The consul ordered the soldiers to arm and follow him outside the rampart. To the lieutenants, tribunes, and prefects of the allies he explained what part it was needful for their several commands to play. They all assured him that, as for themselves, they were ready for anything, but that the soldiers were dispirited; all night long they had been kept awake by the groans of the wounded and the dying; had the enemy attacked the camp before daylight, their fear would have been so great as to cause them to desert their ranks: as it was, they were withheld by shame from running away, but were otherwise as good as beaten.

On hearing this, the consul thought he had best go about himself among the men and talk to them. Wherever he went he scolded those who were hesitating to arm themselves: Why did they linger and hold back? The enemy would come into the camp, unless they went out; and they would be fighting before their tents, if they were not willing to fight before the palisade. If men armed themselves

LIVY

- A.U.C. 10 cantibus dubiam victoriam esse; qui nudus atque
 469 inermis hostem maneat, ei aut mortem aut servitutem 11 patiendam. Haec iurganti increpantique responde-bant confectos se pugna hesterna esse, nec virium quicquam nec sanguinis superesse; maiores multi-tudinem hostium apparere quam pridie fuerit.
 12 Inter haec appropinquabat agmen; et iam breviore
 intervallo certiora intuentes, vallum secum portare
 Samnitem adfirmant nec dubium esse quin castra
 13 circumvallatur sint. Tunc enimvero consul indignum facinus esse vociferari tantam contumeliam igno-14 miniamque ab ignavissimo accipi hoste. "Etiamne circumsedebimur" inquit "in castris, ut fame potius per ignominiam quam ferro, si necesse est, per virtutem moriamur?" Di bene verterent; facerent 15 quod¹ se dignum quisque ducerent: consulem M.
 Atilium vel solum. si nemo aliis sequatur, iturum
 adversus hostes casurumque inter signa Samnitium
 potius quam circumvallari castra Romana videat.
 16 Dicta consulis legati tribunique et omnes turmae equitum et centuriones primorum ordinum approbayvere.
 17 Tum pudore victus miles segniter arma capit,
 segniter e castris egreditur longo agmine nec con-
 tinenti; maesti ac prope victi procedunt adversus 18 hostem nec spe nec animo certiore. Itaque simul conspecta sunt Romana signa, extemplo a primo

¹ Di bene verterent: facerent quod Duker: di (ordii) bene
 uerterent facerentque quod Ω.

¹ The true explanation being that the Samnites were quitting their camp and were carrying the stakes to use in constructing the next one.

and fought, it was a question whose the victory B.C. 224 would be; but a man who waited for the enemy, unarmed and helpless, must put up with either death or slavery. To these objurgations and reproaches they replied that they were exhausted with the battle of the previous day and had no strength left nor blood to shed; while the enemy appeared to be in greater numbers than on the day before.

Meanwhile the column was approaching; and presently, as the soldiers obtained a closer view of them, they declared that the Samnites were carrying stakes and were doubtless going to fence in the camp.¹ At this the consul lost all patience, and shouted out that it was a shameful thing to suffer such disgrace and humiliation at the hands of the most cowardly of foes. "Shall we even be pent up within our camp," he cried, "to die shamefully of hunger, rather than, if need be, by the sword, like gallant men?" Heaven prosper them! They must act as each thought worthy of himself; but the consul, Marcus Atilius—alone if there were none to follow him—would charge the enemy, and sooner fall amongst the standards of the Samnites than see a Roman camp beleaguered. The consul's words were approved by the lieutenants and the tribunes and by all the squadrons of horse and the centurions of highest rank.

Then the soldiers began, for very shame, to arm, and slowly emerged from the stockade; in a long and straggling column, discouraged and almost beaten, they advanced towards the enemy, who were no better off for hopefulness or courage. Accordingly, no sooner had they beheld the Roman standards than a murmur ran through the column

LIVY

A.U.C.
460

Samnitium agmine ad novissimum fremitus perfertur,
 exire, id quod timuerint, ad impediendum iter Romanos; nullam inde ne fugae quidem patere
 viam; illo loco aut cadendum esse aut stratis hostibus per corpora eorum evadendum.

XXXVI. In medium¹ sarcinas coniciunt; armati suis quisque ordinibus instruunt aciem. Iam exiguum inter duas acies erat spatium, et stabant exspectantes dum ab hostibus prius impetus prius clamor inciperet. Neutris animus est ad pugnandum, diversique integri atque intacti abissent, ni cedenti instaturum alterum timuissent. Sua sponte inter invitatos tergiversantesque segnis pugna clamore incerto atque
 impari coepit; nec vestigio quisquam movebatur.
 Tum consul Romanus, ut rem excitaret, equitum paukas turmas extra ordinem immisit; quorum cum plerique delapsi ex equis essent et alii turbati, et a Samnitium acie ad opprimendos eos qui ceciderant et ad suos tuendos ab Romanis procursum est. Inde paulum irritata pugna est; sed aliquanto et impigre magis et plures procurrerant Samnites et turbatus
 eques sua ipse subsidia territis equis proculeavit.
 Hinc fuga copta totam avertit aciem Romanam;
 iamque in terga fugientium Samnites pugnabant,
 cum consul equo praevectus ad portam castrorum ac-

¹ in medium Iac. Gronovius: in medio Ω.

of the Samnites, from the foremost to the hindmost, ^{B.C. 294} that the Romans—just as they had feared—were coming out to dispute their passing; there was no way open even for flight; they must fall where they stood, or else cut down their foes and escape over their bodies.

XXXVI. They heaped up their baggage together, and, being armed, went every man to his own place in the ranks, and the battle-line was formed. And now there was but a little space between the armies, and they halted, each waiting for the other to be first to attack and first to raise a cheer. Neither side had any stomach for fighting, and they would have gone off in opposite directions, scatheless and unhurt, had they not been afraid that, if they retired, their enemies would advance. No signal was given, but though unwilling and reluctant, they began to fight, in a half-hearted manner, with an uncertain and unequal shout; nor would any man stir from his place.

Then the Roman consul, to put some life into the work, detached a few troops of cavalry and sent them in. Of these the most part were unhorsed, and, the rest being thrown into confusion, there was a rush on the part of the Samnites to dispatch the fallen and on that of the Romans to save their comrades. This infused a little spirit into the fighting; but the Samnites had charged somewhat more briskly and in greater numbers, and the disordered cavalry, their horses becoming terrified, rode down their own supports, who began a flight that spread to the whole Roman army. And now the Samnites were on the backs of the fugitives, when the consul, galloping on before to the gate of the camp, posted

A.U.C. 7 statione equitum ibi opposita edictoque ut quicumque 460 ad vallum tenderet, sive ille Romanus sive Samnis
 esset, pro hoste haberetur,¹ haec ipse minitans obstitit 8 profuse tendentibus suis in castra. “Quo pergis” inquit, “miles? Et hic arma et viros invenies nec vivo consule tuo nisi victor castra intrabis; proinde elige, cum eive an hoste pugnare malis.” 9 Haec dicente equites infestis cuspidibus circumfunduntur ac peditem in pugnam redire iubent.
 Non virtus solum consulis sed fors etiam adiuvit, quod
 non institerunt Samnites spatiumque circumagendi
 signa vertendique aciem a castris in hostem fuit.
 10 Tum alii alios hortari ut repeterent pugnam; centuriones ab signiferis rapta signa inferre et ostendere
 suis paucos et ordinibus inconpositis effuse venire 11 hostes. Inter haec consul manus ad caelum attollens voce clara, ita ut exaudiretur, templum Iovi Statori
 vovet, si constitisset a fuga Romana acies redintegratoque proelio cecidisset vicissetque legiones Sam-12 nitium. Omnes undique admissi ad restituendam pugnam, duces milites, peditum equitumque vis.
 Numen etiam deorum respexit nomen Romanum
 visum; adeo facile inclinata res repulsique a castris
 hostes, mox etiam redacti ad eum locum in quo

¹ haberetur (followed by erasure) A ꝝ; haberent ꝝ; haberet *M.A.*² (or A⁴).

there a guard of horse and commanded them, who- B.C. 294 soever should make for the rampart, be he Roman or Samnite, to treat him as a foe. He likewise threatened the men himself, and stopped them as they made in disorder for the camp. "Where are you going, men?" he shouted: "Here too you will find arms and soldiers, and while your consul lives
you shall not enter the camp, except as victors.
Choose, therefore, whether you would sooner fight with fellow-citizens or enemies!"

As the consul spoke these words, the cavalry gathered round the infantry and levelling their spears bade them return into the battle. Not only the consul's bravery but Fortune also helped; for the Samnites did not press their advantage, and he had time to reverse his standards and change his front from the camp to the enemy. They then began to encourage each other to resume the fight; the centurions snatched the standards from the standard-bearers and carried them forward, pointing out to their men that the enemy were few in number and were coming on in irregular and ill-formed ranks.
At this juncture the consul lifted up his hands to heaven, and in a clear voice, so as to be overheard, vowed a temple to Jupiter the Stayer, if the Roman army should stay its flight, and renewing the struggle cut to pieces and overcome the legions of the Samnites. Everybody, all along the line—officers, soldiers, infantry and horse—made an effort to restore the day. It even seemed that the divine power of the gods was concerned for the renown
of Rome, so easily was the struggle turned and the enemy repulsed from the camp, and in a short time driven back to the place where the fighting had

LIVY

- a.v.c. 13 commissa pugna erat. Ibi obiacente sarcinarum ⁴⁶⁰ cumulo, quas coniecerant in medium, haesere im-pediti; deinde, ne diriperentur res, orbem armatorum 14 sarcinis circumdant. Tum vero eos a fronte urgere pedites, ab tergo circumvecti equites; ita in medio caesi captique. Captivorum numerus fuit septem milium octingentorum,¹ qui omnes nudi sub iugum
 missi: caesos rettulere ad quattuor milia octingentos.
 15 Ne Romanis quidem laeta victoria fuit; recensente consule biduo acceptam cladem amissorum militum
 numerus relatus septem milium octingentorum.
 16 Dum haec in Apulia gerebantur, altero exercitu Samnites Interamnam, coloniam Romanam, quae via Latina est, occupare conati urbem non tenuerunt;
 17 agros depopulati, cum praedam aliam inde mixtam
 hominum atque pecudum colonosque captos agerent,
 in victorem incidunt consulem ab Lucezia redeuntem;
 nec praedam solum amittunt sed ipsi longo atque
 18 impedito agmine incompositi caeduntur. Consul Interamnam edicto dominis ad res suas noscendas
 recipiendasque revocatis et exercitu ibi relicto 19 comitiorum causa Romam est profectus. Cui de triumpho agenti negatus honos et ob amissa tot milia militum et quod captivos sine pactione sub iugum misisset.

XXXVII. Consul alter Postumius, quia in Samni-tibus materia belli deerat, in Etruriam² transducto

¹ octingentorum (decc) A⁶ Drakenborch: acc (or other corruptions) Ω.

² in Etruriam Σ: etruriam Ω.

¹ The consul was blamed not for humiliating the enemy, but for letting them off with the humiliation—as though they had surrendered upon that understanding—instead of selling them as slaves, which he had it in his power to do.

begun. There they were held up by the heap of bundles which they had piled together, and, to keep their effects from being rifled, they formed around them a circle of armed men. Then the foot-soldiers fell hotly upon them in the front, and the cavalry rode round and assailed them in the rear ; and so between the two they were slaughtered or made prisoners. The number of the captives was seven thousand eight hundred, who were all stripped and sent under the yoke : the slain were reported at four thousand eight hundred. Even the Romans had no joy of their victory, for the consul found, on reckoning up the two days' casualties, that he had lost seven thousand eight hundred men.

Whilst these affairs were taking place in Apulia, the Samnites with a second army attempted to seize Interamna, a Roman colony on the Latin Way, but could not take it ; having pillaged the farms, they were driving off a miscellaneous booty of men and beasts, together with the captured settlers, when they encountered the victorious consul returning from Luceria, and not only lost their spoils, but, marching without order in a long and encumbered column, were massacred themselves. The consul made proclamation summoning the owners back to Interamna to identify and receive again their property, and, leaving there his army, went to Rome for the purpose of conducting the elections. When he sought to obtain a triumph, the honour was denied him, on the ground that he had lost so many thousand men, and because he had sent the prisoners under the yoke, though they had made no terms.¹

XXXVII. The other consul, Postumius, in default of enemies in Samnium, transferred his army to

A.U.C.
460

exercitu primum pervastaverat Volsiniensem agrum ;
 2 dein cum egressis ad tuendos fines haud procul
 moenibus ipsorum depugnat : duo milia octingenti¹
 Etruscorum caesi ; ceteros propinquitas urbis tutata
 3 est. In Rusellatum² agrum exercitus traductus ;
 ibi non agri tantum vastati sed oppidum etiam expugnatum ; capta amplius duo milia hominum, minus 4 duo milia circa muros caesa. Pax tamen clarior maiorque quam bellum in Etruria eo anno fuerat parta est. Tres validissimae urbes, Etruriae capita, 5 Volsinii Perusia Arretium, pacem petiere ; et vestimentis militum frumentoque pacti cum consule, ut mitti Romam oratores liceret, indutias in quadraginta annos impetraverunt. Multa praesens quingentum milium aeris in singulas³ civitates imposita.

6 Ob hasee res gestas consul cum triumphum ab
 senatu moris magis causa quam spe impetrandi 7 petisset videretque alios quod tardius ab urbe exis-set, alios quod iniussu senatus ex Samnio in Etruriam transisset, partim suos inimicos, partim collegae
 amicos ad solacium aequatae repulsae sibi quoque 8 negare triumphum, "Non ita" inquit, "patres conscripti, vestrae maiestatis meminero, ut me consulem
 esse obliviouscar. Eodem iure imperii quo bella gessi,

¹ octingenti (decc) A⁵ Drukenborch: accc (or other corruptions) Ω.

² Rusellatum Gronovius (chap. iv. § 5): rosellanum (or other corruptions) Ω.

³ aeris in singulas Andreas (ed. Rom. 1469) : aeris singulas MPT : aeris singulas M³ : aeris singulis I²UT²A⁶ : aeris in I² : omitted by DLA.

Etruria. There he first devastated the lands of the ^{B.C. 294} Volsinienses, and then, when they came out to defend their territory, defeated them at no great distance from their own walls. Two thousand eight hundred Etruscans were slain; the rest were saved by their nearness to the city. The army was then led into the territory of Rusellae. There not only were the fields laid waste, but the town was captured too. More than two thousand were made prisoners and somewhat fewer were killed in the fighting about the walls. Yet a peace was made that year in Etruria that was more glorious and of more importance than the fighting had been. Three very powerful cities, the chief places in that country, namely Volsinii, Perusia, and Arretium, made overtures of peace, and arranged with the consul, in return for clothing and corn for his troops, to be permitted to send ambassadors to Rome, who obtained a truce for forty years. A fine of five hundred thousand asses, to be paid at once, was assessed upon each state.

In view of these achievements, the consul asked the senate for a triumph, more as a matter of custom than with any hope of obtaining his request. When he perceived that some were for denying him on the ground of his tardiness in leaving the City, and others because he had gone over without the authorization of the senate from Samnium into Etruria—a part of these critics being his personal enemies, and the rest friends of his colleague, who were minded to console the latter for his rebuff by denying a triumph to Postumius also—seeing, I say, how matters stood, he spoke as follows: “I shall not be so mindful, Conscription Fathers, of your dignity as to forget that I am consul. In virtue of the same authority with bellis feliciter gestis, Samnio atque Etruria subactis, 9 victoria et pace parta triumphabo." Ita senatum reliquit. Inde inter tribunos plebis contentio orta;

A.U.C.
460

 pars intercessuros, ne novo exemplo triumpharet
 aiebat, pars auxilio se adversus collegas triumphanti 10 futuros. Iactata res ad populum est vocatusque eo consul cum M. Horatium L.¹ Valerium consules, C. Marcium Rutulum² nuper, patrem eius qui tunc censor esset, non ex auctoritate senatus sed iussu 11 populi triumphasse diceret, adiebat se quoque
 laturum fuisse ad populum, ni sciret mancipia nobilium, tribunos plebis, legem impedituros; voluntatem sibi ac favorem consentientis populi pro 12 omnibus iussis esse ac futura. Posteroque die auxilio tribunorum plebis trium adversus intercessionem septem tribunorum et consensum senatus celebrante populo diem triumphavit.

13 Et huius anni parum constans memoria est. Postumium auctor est Claudius in Samnio captis aliquot urbibus in Apulia fusum fugatumque saucium ipsum cum paucis Luceriam compulsum: ab Atilio in 14 Etruria res gestas eumque triumphasse. Fabius ambo consules in Samnio et ad Luceriam res gessisse

¹ M. Horatium L. Glareanus and Siganus: L. Horatium M. Ω (cf. C.I.L. i², p. 44, A.U.C. 305).

² Rutulum (see III. vii. 6 and VII. xxxviii. 8) rutilium Ω.

¹ i.e. the law granting the triumph.

² Compare chap. xxvi. §§ 5-7, and chap. xxx. §§ 4-7.

³ Q. Claudius Quadrigarius composed his annals about 80 B.C., covering the period from the Gallic invasion to his own times.

⁴ Q. Fabius Pictor was a contemporary of Hannibal and wrote an annalistic history of Rome in Greek.

B.C. 294

which I conducted my wars, I intend, now that those wars are happily concluded with the subjugation of Samnium and Etruria and the winning of victory and peace, to celebrate a triumph." So saying he left the senate. A dispute then arose amongst the tribunes of the plebs; some declared that they would interpose their veto to prevent this unprecedented kind of triumph, others that they would support his claims against the opposition of their colleagues. The question was discussed in an assembly and the consul was asked to speak. He reminded them that Marcus Horatius and Lucius Valerius, the consuls, and lately Gaius Marcius Rutulus, father of him who was then censor, had triumphed not by authorization of the senate but by command of the people; and he added that he, too, would have referred the question to the people, had he not known that there were tribunes who were owned by the nobles and would obstruct the law¹; but the wishes and approbation of the people when they were of one accord had all the binding force with him—and ever would have—of any orders whatsoever. And so, on the following day, with the support of three tribunes of the plebs, against the opposition of seven who forbade the proceedings and a unanimous senate, Postumius triumphed, with the people thronging in attendance.

Of this year, too, the tradition is uncertain.² Postumius, if we follow Claudio,³ after capturing several cities in Samnium, was defeated in Apulia and put to flight, and, being wounded himself, was forced to take refuge with a few followers in Luceria; while Atilius campaigned in Etruria and obtained a triumph. Fabius⁴ writes that both consuls fought in Samnium and at Luceria; that the army was led

A.U.C.
469

scribit traductumque in Etruriam exercitum—sed ab
utro consule non adicit¹—et ad Lucerium utrimque 15 multos occisos inque ea pugna Iovis Statoris aedem
votam, ut Romulus ante voverat; sed fanum tantum, 16 id est locus templo effatus, fuerat. Ceterum hoc demum anno ut aedem etiam fieri senatus iuberet bis eiusdem voti damnata re publica² in religionem venit.

A.U.C.
461

XXXVIII. Sequitur hunc annum et consul insignis, L. Papirius Cursor, qua paterna gloria qua sua, et bellum ingens victoriaque quantam de Samnitibus nemo ad eam diem praeter L. Papirium 2 patrem consulis³ pepererat. Et forte eodem conatu apparatuque omni opulentia insignium armorum bellum adornaverant, et deorum etiam adhibuerant
opes, ritu quodam sacramenti vetusto velut initiatis militibus, dilectu per omne Samnum habito nova 3 lege, ut qui iuniorum non convenisset ad impera-
torum edictum quique iniussu abisset eius caput⁴
4 Iovi sacraretur.⁵ Tum exercitus omnis Aquiloniam est indictus. Ad quadraginta⁶ milia militum, quod roboris in Samnio erat, convenerunt.
5 Ibi mediis fere castris locus est consaeptus crati-bus pluteisque et linteis contectus, patens ducentos
6 maxime pedes in omnes pariter partis. Ibi ex libro

¹ adicit adii. Madrig: adiecit Ω.

² re publica A:² Gronorius: respublica Ω.

³ consulis Σ: cōs P: consulem MTDLA: eius consulem U.

⁴ eius caput M. Mueller (II. viii. 2): caput (capud A) Ω.

⁵ sacraretur Madrig: sacratum erat Ω.

⁶ quadraginta (XL) *MULIA*² (or *A*⁶): sexaginta (LX) PTLA.

¹ The same, that is, as in the year 309 B.C., when they had over into Etruria—by which consul he does not state B.C. 294—and that at Luceria both sides suffered heavy losses; in the course of the battle a temple was vowed to Jupiter Stator, as Romulus had vowed one before; but only the fanum, or place set apart for the temple, had been consecrated; this year, however, their scruples demanded that the senate should order the erection of the building, since the state had now been obligated for the second time by the same vow.

XXXVIII. The following year brought with it a B.C. 293 consul, Lucius Papirius Cursor, remarkable both for his father's glory and for his own, and a mighty war, with a victory such as no one, save Lucius Papirius, the consul's father, had until that day obtained over the Samnites. And it happened that the enemy had made their preparations for the war with the same¹ earnestness and pomp and all the magnificence of splendid arms, and had likewise invoked the assistance of the gods, initiating, as it were, their soldiers, in accordance with a certain antique form of oath. But first they held a levy throughout Samnium under this new ordinance, that whosoever of military age did not report in response to the proclamation of the generals, or departed without their orders, should forfeit his life to Jupiter. Which done, they appointed all the army to meet at Aquilonia, where some forty thousand soldiers, the strength of Samnium, came together.

There, at about the middle of the camp, they had enclosed an area, extending approximately two hundred feet in all directions, with wicker hurdles, and roofed it over with linen. In this place they fought against the Romans, who were commanded by the elder Papirius (ix. xl. 2 ff.).

veteri linteo lecto¹ sacrificatum sacerdote Ovio Paccio quodam, homine magno natu, qui se id sacrum
 petere adfirmabat ex vetusta Samnitium religione, qua quondam usi maiores eorum fuissent, cum adimendae Etruseis Capuae clandestinum cepissent 7 consilium. Sacrificio perfecto per viatorem impe-rator acciri iubebat nobilissimum quemque genere
 8 factisque: singuli introducebantur. Erat cum aliis apparatus sacri qui perfundere religione animum posset, tum in loco circa omni contexto arae in medio victimaeque circa caesae et circumstantes cen-9 turiones strictis gladiis. Admovebatur altaribus magis ut victima quam ut sacri particeps adigebaturque² iure iurando quae visa auditaque in eo loco 10 essent,³ non enuntiaturum. Dein iurare cogebant diro quodam carmine, in exsecrationem capitis fami-liaeque et stirpis composito, nisiisset in proelium
 quo⁴ imperatores duxissent et si aut ipse ex acie
 fugisset aut si quem fugientem vidisset non ex-11 templo occidisset. Id primo quidam abnuentes iuratuos se obtruncati circa altaria sunt; iacentes
 deinde inter stragem victimarum documento ceteris 12 fuere ne abnuerent. Primoribus Samnitium ea detestatione obstrictis, decem nominatis ab impera-
 tore, eis dictum ut vir virum legerent donec sedecim

¹ lecto Ω: tecto Madrig.

² adigebaturque D³; adicebaturque MPTDA: adiciebaturque UL.

³ essent M² (or M¹) P² (or P³, u T² (or T¹) D³A⁶: co essent MP: coissent TDLA.

⁴ quo I² u T² (or T¹) A⁶: quod MPTDLA.

¹ At iv. xxxvii. 1 f. we were told how the Etruscan city of Volturnum was captured by the Samnites and renamed Capua.

B.C. 293

offered sacrifice in accordance with directions read from an old linen roll. The celebrant was one Ovius Paccius, an aged man, who claimed to derive this ceremony from an ancient ritual of the Samnites which the forefathers of those present had formerly employed when they had gone secretly about to get Capua away from the Etruscans.¹ On the conclusion of the sacrifice, the general by his apparitor commanded to be summoned all those of the highest degree in birth and deeds of arms ; and one by one they were introduced. Besides other ceremonial preparations, such as might avail to strike the mind with religious awe, there was a place all enclosed, with altars in the midst and slaughtered victims lying about, and round them a guard of centurions² with drawn swords. The man was brought up to the altar, more like a victim than a partaker in the rite, and was sworn not to divulge what he should there see or hear. They then compelled him to take an oath in accordance with a certain dreadful form of words, whereby he invoked a curse upon his head, his household, and his family, if he went not into battle where his generals led the way, or if he either fled from the line himself or saw any other fleeing and did not instantly cut him down. Some there were at first who refused to take this oath ; these were beheaded before the altars, where they lay amongst the slaughtered victims—a warning to the rest not to refuse. When the leading Samnites had been bound by this imprecation, the general named ten of them and bade them choose every man another, and so to proceed until they had brought milium numerum confecissent. Ea legio linteata ab integumento consaepti, in quo¹ sacrata nobilitas erat, appellata est: his arma insignia data et crista statuae galeae, ut inter ceteros eminerent. Paulo plus viginti milium aliis exercitus fuit nec corporum specie nec gloria belli nec apparatu linteatae legioni dispar.² Hic hominum numerus, quod roboris erat, ad Aquiloniam³ consedit.

² These are called “armed priests” at chap. xli. § 3.

XXXIX. Consules profecti ab urbe, prior Sp. Carvilius, cui veteres legiones quas M. Atilius superioris anni consul in agro Interamnati reliquerat decretae erant. Cum eis in Samnum profectus, dum hostes operati superstitionibus concilia secreta agunt, Amitemnum oppidum de Samnitibus vi cepit. Caesa ibi milia hominum duo ferme atque octingenti, capta quattuor milia ducenti septuaginta. Papirius novo exercitu—ita enim decretum erat—scripto Duroniam urbem expugnavit: minus quam collega cepit hominum, plus aliquanto occidit; praeda opulenta utробique est parta. Inde pervagati Samnum consules, maxime depopulato Atinate agro, Carvilius ad Cominium, Papirius ad Aquiloniam, ubi summa rei Samnitium erat, pervenit. Ibi aliquamdiu nec cessatum ab armis est neque naviter pugnatum: lacessendo quietos, resistantibus cedendo comminandoque magis

¹ in quo Freudenberg: a quo Σ: quo Ω.

² dispar Ω (Walters): par u (Conway).

³ ad Aquiloniam Σ: Aquiloniam Ω.

¹ See ix. xxxix. 5. where this mode of selection is described as having been employed by the Etruscans.

² To be consistent with the total given in § 4, this number should be 24,000.

their number up to sixteen thousand.¹ These were B.C. 293 named the “Linen Legion,” from the roof of the enclosure wherein the nobles had been sworn, and were given splendid arms and crested helmets, to distinguish them from the rest. A little over twenty thousand² men composed another corps, which neither in physical appearance nor in martial renown nor in equipment was inferior to the Linen Legion. This was the size of the army, comprising their effective forces, which encamped at Aquilonia.

XXXIX. The consuls set out from the City, Spurius Carvilius, to whom had been assigned the veteran legions which Marcus Atilius the consul of the previous year had left in the territory of Interamna, being the first to take the field. Proceeding with these forces into Samnium, while the enemy, busy with their superstitious rites, were holding secret councils, he carried the Samnite town of Amiternum by assault. There about two thousand eight hundred men were slain and four thousand two hundred and seventy made prisoners. Papirius, having levied a new army—for so it had been decreed—took by storm the city of Duronia, making fewer prisoners than his colleague but killing many more. In each place a rich booty was obtained. Afterwards, the consuls having ranged over Samnium and laid waste especially the district of Atina, Carvilius appeared before Cominium and Papirius before Aquilonia, where the main power of the Samnites lay encamped. There for some days there was neither cessation from hostilities nor downright fighting, but the time was spent in provoking the enemy when they were quiet and retreating when they offered resistance—in a word, in feinting rather

LIVY

A.U.C.
461

7 quam inferendo pugnam dies absumebatur. Quodcumque¹ inciperetur remittereturque, omnium rerum etiam parvarum eventus perferebatur inde in² altera Romana castra, quae viginti milium spatio aberant, et absentis collegae consilia omnibus gerendis intererant rebus, intentiorque Carvilius, quo in maiore³ discrimine res vertebatur, in Aquiloniam quam ad 8 Cominium, quod obsidebat, erat.

L. Papirius, iam per omnia ad dimicandum satis paratus, nuntium ad collegam mittit sibi in animo 9 esse postero die, si per auspicia liceret, configere cum hoste; opus esse et illum quanta maxima vi posset Cominium oppugnare, ne quid laxamenti sit 10 Samnitibus ad subsidia Aquiloniammittenda. Diem ad proficiscendum nuntius habuit; nocte rediit, 11 approbare collegam consulta referens. Papirius nuntio missso extemplo contionem habuit; multa de universo genere belli, multa de praesenti hostium apparatu, vana magis specie quam efficaci ad even- 12 tum, disseruit: non enim cristas volnera facere, et per pista atque aurata scuta transire Romanum pilum, et candore tunicarum fulgentem aciem, ubi 13 res ferro geratur, eruentari. Auream olim atque argenteam Samnitium aciem a parente suo occidione occisam spoliaque ea honestiora victori hosti 14 quam ipsis arma fuisse. Datum hoc forsan nomini familiaeque suae, ut adversus maximos conatus Samnitium opponerentur duces spoliaque ea referrent quae insignia publicis etiam locis decorandis

¹ Quodecumque Madvig: quodcum Ω: quaecum *A*⁶;

² inde in Madvig: in dies Ω.

³ quo in maiore Madvig: quom aiore T: quo maiore Ω.

¹ In 310 B.C. See ix. xl. 1-17.

than attacking. Whatever was undertaken or given over, the result of every skirmish, no matter how trivial it might be, was reported at the other camp, which was twenty miles away. The other colleague, Carvilius, though absent, shared in every plan of operations, and was more intent upon Aquilonia, as the crisis became more imminent, than upon Cominium, to which he was laying siege.

Lucius Papirius, being now prepared at all points for the battle, sent word to his colleague that he purposed, if the auspices permitted, to engage the enemy on the following day; it was needful, he said, that Carvilius should also direct an assault, as violent as possible, on Cominium, that no relaxation of the pressure there might allow of the Samnites' sending relief to Aquilonia. The messenger had a day for the journey. Returning in the night, he reported that Carvilius approved the measures taken by his colleague. Papirius had no sooner sent off the courier than he addressed his troops, and said many things of war in general and much regarding the present equipment of the enemy, more vain and showy than effective. For crests, said he, dealt no wounds, and painted and gilded shields would let the Roman javelin through, and their battle-array, resplendent in white tunics, would be stained with blood when sword met sword. Long ago a gilt and silvern Samnite army had been utterly destroyed by his father, and the spoils had done their conquerors more credit than the arms had brought to their bearers.¹ It had perhaps been granted to his name and family to be sent forth as generals against the mightiest efforts of the Samnites, and to win such trophies as should strikingly adorn even public a.u.c. 15 essent. Deos immortales adesse propter totiens ⁴⁶¹ 16 petita foedera, totiens rupta; si¹ qua coniectura mentis divinae sit, nulli unquam exercitui fuisse infestiores quam qui nefando sacro mixta homininum pecudumque caede respersus, ancipiti deum

 irae devotus, hinc foederum cum Romanis ictorum 17 testes deos, hinc iuris iurandi adversus foedera
 suscepti execrationes horrens, invitus iuraverit, oderit sacramentum, uno tempore deos cives hostes metuat.

XL. Haec comperta perfugarum indicis cum apud infensos iam sua sponte milites disseruisset, simul divinae humanaeque spei pleni clamore consentienti
 pugnam poscunt: paenitet in posterum diem dilatum
 2 certamen; moram diei noctisque oderunt. Tertia vigilia noctis, iam relatis litteris a collega, Papirius
 silentio surgit et pullarium in auspicium mittit.
 3 Nullum erat genus hominum in castris intactum
 cupiditate pugnae, summi infimique acque intenti
 erant: dux militum, miles ducis ardorem spectabat.
 4 Is ardor omnium etiam ad eos qui auspicio intererant pervenit: nam cum pulli non pascerentur, pullarius auspicium mentiri ausus tripudium soli-
 5 stimum consuli nuntiavit. Consul laetus auspicium

¹ si Luterbacher: tum si Ω.

¹ For the use of sacred chickens in augury see vi. xli. 8 and note (Vol. III., p. 344).

B.C. 293

places. The immortal gods, he said, were ready to intervene in behalf of treaties so often sought and so often broken. If it were possible in any way to surmise the feelings of the gods, they had never been more enraged with any army than with this one, which with horrid rites and stained with the commingled blood of men and beasts, doubly devoted to the wrath of Heaven, as it trembled now at the gods that attested the treaties it had made with the Romans, and now at the curses called down when it undertook to break those treaties, had sworn unwillingly, hated its oath, and dreaded at one and the same moment its gods, its fellow-citizens, and its enemies.

XL. These fears had been made known to Papirius by deserters; and when he had described them to his soldiers, incensed as they already were of themselves, their hopes both of gods and men ran high, and they called out in unison demanding battle; they were vexed at the postponement of the struggle until the morrow, and to wait for a day and night disgusted them. In the third watch of the night, having now received his colleague's answer, Papirius rose silently and sent the keeper of the chickens¹ to take the auspices. There was no class of men in camp who were not affected by the lust of battle; both high and low felt the same eagerness; the general could see the ardour of the men, the men that of their general. This universal zeal spread even to those who took the auspices, for when the chickens refused to feed, their keeper dared to falsify the presage and reported that the corn danced on the ground as it fell from their greedy beaks. The consul joyfully announced that

513

A.U.C.
461

egregium esse et deis auctoribus rem gesturos pro-6 nuntiat signumque pugnae proponit. Exeunti iam
 forte in aciem nuntiat perfuga viginti cohortes Samnitium—quadringenariae ferme erant—Cominium profectas. Quod ne ignoraret collega, ex-templo nuntium mittit; ipse signa ocius proferri 7 iubet: subsidia¹ suis quaeque locis et praefectos
 subsidiis attribuerat; dextro cornu L. Volumnium, sinistro L. Scipionem, equitibus legatos alios, C.
 8 Caedicium et T. Trebonium,² praefecit; Sp. Nautium mulos detractis elitellis cum tribus cohortibus³ alariis
 in tumulum conspectum propere circumducere iubet
 atque inde inter ipsam dimicationem quanto maxime posset moto pulvere se⁴ ostendere.

9 Dum his intentus imperator erat, alteratio inter
 pullarios orta de auspiecio eius diei exauditaque ab
 equitibus Romanis, qui rem haud sfernendam rati
 Sp. Papirio, fratis filio consulis, ambigi de auspicio 10 renuntiaverunt. Iuvenis ante doctrinam deos spernentem natus rem inquisitam, ne quid incompertum 11 deferret, ad eonsulem detulit. Cui ille: "Tu quidem macte virtute diligentiaque esto! Ceterum qui auspicio adest si quid falsi nuntiat, in semet ipsum

¹ subsidia Madrig: subsidiaque Ω.

² T. Trebonium Weissenborn: Trebonium Ω.

³ tribus cohortibus Hertz: cohortibus (cohortir P: cohortis F) Ω.

⁴ moto pulvere se Madrig: moto puluere Ω.

¹ For a similar use of pack-animals to simulate cavalry, compare VII. xiv. 7-10.

² Compare the caustic remark at III. xx. 5: But there had not yet come about that contempt for the gods which possesses the present generation; nor did everybody seek to construe oaths and laws to suit himself, but rather shaped his own practices by them.

the omens were most favourable, and that the gods B.C. 293 would be with them as they fought. So saying, he displayed the signal for a battle. It chanced, as he was already moving out to the field, that a deserter came up with the information that twenty cohorts of the Samnites—of about four hundred each—had set out for Cominium. That his colleague might not be ignorant of this, he instantly dispatched a messenger to him, and ordered his own troops to advance in double time. He had assigned supports to take their posts at favourable points and officers to command them; the right wing he had given to Lucius Volumnius, the left to Lucius Scipio; to lead the cavalry he appointed the other lieutenants, Gaius Caedicius and Titus Trebonius. Spurius Nautius he directed to remove the pack-saddles from the mules, and with three cohorts of auxiliaries to make a hasty detour to a hill which lay in full view, and thence to show himself, in the heat of the engagement, raising as much dust as possible.¹

While the general was thus employed, a dispute which broke out amongst the keepers of the chickens about the auspices for that day was overheard by some Roman cavalrymen, who, deeming it no negligible matter, reported to Spurius Papirius, the consul's nephew, that the auspices were being called in question. The young man had been born before the learning that makes light of the gods,² and having inquired into the affair, that he might not be the bearer of an uncertain rumour, acquainted the consul with it. The consul replied: "For yourself, I commend your conduct and your diligence; but he who takes the auspices, if he reports aught that is false, draws down the wrath of Heaven upon religionem recipit: mihi quidem tripudium nuntiatum; populo Romano exercitique egregium auspicium est." Centurionibus deinde imperavit uti pullarios inter prima signa constituerent. Promovent et Samnites signa; insequitur acies ornata armataque, ut hostium¹ quoque magnificum spectaculum esset. Priusquam clamor tolleretur concurrereturque, emisso temere pilo ictus pullarius ante signa cecidit. Quod ubi consuli nuntiatum est, "Di in proelio sunt" inquit; "habet poenam noxiū caput!" Ante consulem haec dicentem corvus voce clara occinuit; quo laetus augurio consul, adfirmans nunquam humanis rebus magis praesentes interfuisse deos, signa canere et clamorem tolli iussit.

A.U.C.
461

XLI. Proelium commissum atrox, ceterum longe disparibus animis: Romanos ira spes ardor certaminis avidos hostium sanguinis in proelium rapit; Samnium magnam partem necessitas ac religio invitos magis resistere quam inferre pugnam cogit. Nec sustinuissent primum clamorem atque impetum Romanorum, per aliquot iam annos vinei adsueti, nisi potentior alius metus insidens pectoribus a fuga retineret. Quippe in oculis erat omnis ille occulti paratus sacri et armati sacerdotes et promiscua hominum pecudumque strages et respersae fando nefandoque sanguine arae et dira exseeratio ac himself; as for me, I was told that the corn had ^{B.C. 293} danced; it is an excellent omen for the Roman People and the army." He then ordered the centurions to station the keepers of the chickens in the front rank. The Samnites, too, advanced their standards, which were followed by the battle-line in gorgeous armour—a splendid spectacle, though composed of enemies. Before the first shout and the clash of arms, a random javelin struck the chicken-keeper and he fell before the standards. The consul, on being told of this, exclaimed, "The gods are present in the battle; the guilty wretch has paid the penalty!" In front of the consul a raven, just as he spoke, uttered a clear cry, and Papirius, rejoiced with the augury, and declaring that never had the gods been more instant to intervene in human affairs, bade sound the trumpets and give a cheer.

¹ hostium Ω : hostibus (or hosti) edd.

XLI. The battle was fought fiercely, but with far from equal spirit. The Romans were filled with rage and hope and ardour for the combat, and, thirsting for their enemies' blood, rushed into the engagement. As for the Samnites, in most cases it was necessity and the fear of Heaven that compelled them, however reluctant, rather to resist than to attack. Nor would they have held out against the first battle-cry and onset of the Romans, accustomed, as they had now been for some years, to being beaten, had not another yet more powerful fear benumbed their hearts and prevented them from fleeing. For their eyes beheld all that array of the secret rite, and the armed priests, and the mingled slaughter of men and beasts, and the altars spattered with the blood of victims—and with that other blood—and they could hear the baleful execrations furiale carmen, detestandae familiae stirpique compositum; iis vinculis fugae obstricti stabant, civem magis quam hostem timentes. Instare Romanus a cornu utroque, a media acie, et caedere deorum hominumque attonitos metu; repugnatur segniter, ut ab iis¹ quos timor moraretur a fuga.

LIVY

A.U.C.
461

Iam prope ad signa caedes pervenerat, cum ex transverso pulvis velut ingentis agminis incessu motus apparuit; Sp. Nautius—Octavium Maecium quidam eum tradunt—cum auxiliaribus² cohortibus erat; pulverem maiorem quam pro numero excitantibus; incidentes mulis calones frondosos ramos per terram trahebant. Arma signaque per turbidam lucem in primo apparebant; post altior densiorque pulvis equitum speciem cogentium agmen dabat febellitque non Samnites modo sed etiam Romanos;

et consul adfirmavit errorem clamitans inter prima signa, ita ut vox etiam ad hostis accideret, captum Cominium, victorem collegam adesse: adniterentur vincere, priusquam gloria alterius exercitus fieret.

Haec insidens equo; inde tribunis centurionibusque imperat, ut viam equitibus patefaciant; ipse Trebonio Caedicioque praedixerat, ubi se cuspidem erectam quatientem vidissent, quanta maxima vi possent contarent equites in hostem. Ad nutum omnia, ut and that dire oath, framed to invoke perdition on their families and on their stock. These were the chains that stayed them from flight, and they feared their countrymen more than they feared their foes. On came the Romans from either wing and from the centre, and cut them down as they stood there dazed by the dread of gods and men. They resisted, but sluggishly, like men whom cowardice restrained from running.

¹ iis ζ : his Ω: hiis A.² cum auxiliaribus Ma-lvig: dux alaribus (laribus A) Ω: dux cum alaribus Koch.

The carnage had now reached almost to the standards, when a cloud of dust appeared on their flank, as though raised by the oncoming of a mighty host. It was Spurius Nautius—some say Octavius Maecius—with the auxiliary cohorts; they made more dust than their numbers warranted, for the grooms who rode the mules were dragging leafy branches along the ground. Arms and standards were made out in the van through the murky air, and behind them another denser cloud of dust seemed to show that cavalry were closing the rear, and deceived not only the Samnites, but the Romans as well. This mistake the consul confirmed by calling out in the front ranks, so loud that his voice carried even to the enemy, that Cominium was taken, and that his victorious colleague was at hand; let them therefore strive to conquer before the other army won the glory. He was on horseback as he shouted these words. He then commanded the tribunes and centurions to open a path for the cavalry, having previously admonished Trebonius and Caedicius that when they saw him holding his lance aloft and shaking it, they should make their horsemen run full tilt against the enemy. Everything fell out according to his wishes,

LIVY

A.U.C.
461

ex ante praeparato, fiunt; panduntur inter ordines viae; provolat eques atque infestis cuspidibus in medium agmen hostium ruit perrumpitque ordines quacumque impetum dedit. Instant Volumnius et Scipio et percusso sternunt.

10 Tum iam deorum hominumque victa vi, funduntur linteatae cohortes; pariter iurati iniuratique fugiunt
 11 nec quemquam praeter hostes metuunt. Peditum¹ quod superfuit pugnae in castra aut Aquiloniam compulsum est; nobilitas equitesque Bovianum perfugerunt. Equites eques sequitur, peditem pedes; diversa cornua dextrum ad castra Samnitium, laevum
 12 ad urbem tendit. Prior aliquanto Volumnius castra cepit; ad urbem Scipioni maiore resistitur vi, non quia plus animi victis est sed melius muri quam vallum armatos arcent; inde lapidibus propulsant 13 hostem. Scipio, nisi in primo pavore priusquam colligerentur animi transacta res esset, lentiorē fore munitae urbis oppugnationem ratus, interrogat milites sat in aequo animo paterentur ab altero cornu castra capta esse, se victores pelli a portis urbis.
 14 Reclamantibus universis primus ipse seuto super caput elato pergit ad portam; secuti alii testudine facta in urbem perrumpunt deturbatisque Samnitibus quae circa portam erant muri occupavere; penetrare

¹ peditum Gronovius: peditum agmen Ω.

as happens when plans are laid beforehand. Lanes B.C. 293 were opened up between the files; the cavalry dashed out, and with levelled spears assailed the midst of the enemy's array, and broke his ranks wherever they charged. Hard after them came Volumnius and Scipio, and made havoc of the disordered Samnites.

Then at last, overwhelmed by gods and men, the Linen Cohorts were put to rout; the sworn and the unsworn fled alike, and knew no fear but fear of the enemy. Such portion of the foot as survived the battle was driven to the camp or to Aquilonium; the nobles and cavalry escaped to Bovianum. Horse were pursued by horse, infantry by infantry. The Roman wings advanced on different objectives, the right on the Samnite camp, the left on their city. Volumnius succeeded somewhat sooner in capturing the camp. From the city Scipio met with a more violent resistance—not that vanquished men are more courageous, but walls avail better to keep out armed enemies than does a rampart; and from thence they drove their assailants off with stones. Scipio, fearing that it would be a tedious task to reduce a fortified city, unless the affair were concluded during the first panic of his enemies and before they should collect their spirits, asked his soldiers whether they could be content that the other wing should have taken the camp, while they, though victors, were repulsed from the city gates. When they all together cried out "No!" he himself led the way to the gate, shield over head, and the others, following him, formed a testudo, burst into the city, and hurling down the defenders seized the walls adjoining the gate; they durst not in interiora urbis, quia pauci admodum erant, non audent.

XLII. Haec primo ignorare consul et intentus recipiendo exercitui esse; iam enim praeeeps in occasum sol erat et appetens nox periculosa et suspecta omnia etiam vitoribus faciebat. Progressus longius ab dextra capta castra videt, ab laeva clamorem in urbe mixtum pugnantium ac paventium fremitu esse; et tum forte certamen ad portam erat. Adveetus deinde equo propius, ut suos in muris videt nec iam integri quiequam esse, quoniam temeritate pauorum magnae rei parta occasio esset, acciri quas receperat copias signaque in urbem inferri iussit. Ingressi proxima ex parte¹ quia nox approximabat, quievere. Nocte oppidum ab hostibus desertum est.

Caesa illo die ad Aquiloniam Samnitium milia viginti trecenti quadraginta, capta tria milia octingenti et septuaginta, signa militaria nonaginta septem. Ceterum illud memoriae traditur, non ferme alium ducent laetiorem in acie visum seu suopte ingenio seu fiducia bene gerundae rei. Ab eodem robore animi neque controverso auspicio revocari a proelio potuit et in ipso discrimine quo templa deis immorventure into the middle of the city, because their B.C. 293 numbers were so small.

¹ ex parte Ω: ea parte Iac. Gronorius.

XLII. Of these events the consul was at first unaware, and was intent upon the withdrawal of his army; for the sun was now rapidly sinking in the west, and night coming on apace made all things dangerous and suspect, even to the victors. As he rode farther forward, he saw on his right hand that the camp was taken, while from the city, on his left, a confused uproar was rising in which the shouts of the combatants were mingled with screams of terror; and it so happened that at that very moment the struggle at the gate was in progress. Then, riding nearer and perceiving that his men were on the walls and that his course was already marked out for him, since the adventurousness of a few men had provided him with a great opportunity, he gave orders that the troops withdrawn should be called back and advance against the city. They entered it on the nearest side, and, as night was approaching, bivouacked; in the night the town was abandoned by the enemy.

There were slain that day of the Samnites at Aquilonia twenty thousand three hundred and forty, and three thousand eight hundred and seventy were captured, with ninety-seven military standards. Tradition also avers that hardly had there ever been a general more joyous in combat, whether owing to his native temper or to his confidence that he should gain the victory. It resulted from the same stoutness of heart that he was not to be recalled from giving battle by the dispute about the omen, and that in the hour of crisis, when it was customary to vow temples to the immortal gods, he made a talibus voveri mos erat voverat Iovi Victori, si legiones hostium fudisset, pocillum mulsi priusquam temetum biberet, sese facturum. Id votum dis cordi fuit et auspicia in bonum verterunt.

XLIII. Eadem fortuna ab altero consule ad Cominium¹ gesta res. Prima luce ad moenia omnibus copiis admotis corona cinxit urbem subsidiaque firma, ne qua eruptio fieret, portis opposuit. Iam signum dantem eum nuntius a collega trepidus de viginti cohortium adventu et ab impetu moratus est et partem copiarum revocare instructam intentamque ad oppugnandum coegit. D. Brutum Scaevam legatum cum legione prima et decem cohortibus alariis equitatuque ire adversus subsidium hostium iussit: quocunque in loco fuisset obvius, obsisteret ac moraretur manumque, si forte ita res posceret, conferret, modo ne ad Cominium eae copiae admoveri possent. Ipse scalas ferri ad muros ab omni parte urbis iussit ac testudine ad portas successit; simul et refringebantur portae et vis undique in muros fiebat. Samnites sicut antequam in muris viderent armatos satis animi habuerunt ad prohibendos urbis aditu hostes, ita, postquam iam non ex intervallo nec missilibus sed comminus gerebatur res et qui aegre vow to Jupiter the Victor that if he routed the ^{B.C. 293} legions of the enemy he would present him with a thimbleful of mead before he drank strong wine himself. This vow was pleasing to the gods and they gave a good turn to the auspices.¹

¹ Cominium A: cō(or com-)minium Ω: cōmonium P: cōmineum (? F).

¹ The consul's vow was by no means prompted by a spirit of mockery, but was merely an hilarious expression of confidence and good understanding—not without a playful assumption of superiority as a toper, implied in the contrast between pocillum mulsi and temetum. That Jupiter should have savoured the jest shows him to have been blessed with a livelier sense of humour than the elder Pliny, who cites the anecdote (N. H., xiv. 91) as evidence how sparingly wine was used in the old days.

BOOK X. XLII. 7-XLIII. 6

XLIII. The same good fortune attended the other consul at Cominium. With the dawn he led up all his forces under the walls and invested the city, posting strong supports to prevent any sally from the gates. He was in the act of giving the signal when the courier from his colleague came up with the alarming news about the twenty cohorts,² thus delaying the assault and obliging him to recall a part of his troops who were already drawn up and eager to attack. He commanded Decimus Brutus Scaeva, his lieutenant, to proceed with the first legion, ten auxiliary cohorts, and the cavalry, to confront the new forces of the enemy: wherever he fell in with them, he was to block their path and delay them, giving battle if the situation happened to require it; but on no account must these troops be suffered to approach Cominium. He himself gave orders to bring up scaling-ladders from every side against the walls of the city, and under a mantlet of shields approached the gates. Thus at the same instant the gates were burst open and the walls assaulted. The Samnites, although, until they beheld armed men upon their walls, they had pluck enough to keep their enemies from coming near the city, yet when the combat was no longer carried on with missiles at long range, but was fought hand-to-hand, and when those who had

¹ See chap. xl. § 6.

A.U.C.
461

successerant ex plano in muros, loco quem magis
 timuerant victo, facile in hostem imparem ex aequo 7 pugnabant, relictis turribus murisque in forum omnes compulsi paulisper inde temptaverunt extremam 8 pugnae fortunam; deinde abiectis armis ad undecim milia hominum et quadringenti in fidem consulis venerunt; caesa ad quattuor milia octingenti¹ octoginta.

9 Sic ad Cominium, sic ad Aquiloniam gesta res; in medio inter duas urbes spatio, ubi tertia exspectata erat pugna, hostes non inventi. Septem milia passuum cum abessent a Cominio, revocati ab suis 10 neutri proelio occurrerunt. Primis ferme tenebris, cum in conspectu iam castra, iam Aquiloniam habuissent, clamor eos utrumque par accidens susti-11 nuit; deinde regione² castrorum, quae incensa ab
 Romanis erant, flamma late fusa³ certioris cladis 12 indicio progredi longius prohibuit; eo ipso loco temere sub armis strati passim inquietum omne
 tempus noctis exspectando timendoque lucem egere.

13 Prima luce incerti quam in partem intenderent iter repente in fugam consternantur⁴ conspecti ab equitibus, qui egressos nocte ab oppido Samnites persecuti
 viderant multitudinem non vallo, non stationibus

¹ octingenti Gronovius: acc (or other corruptions) Ω.² regione uA^xz̄: regionem 'or -ē)Ω: e regione Σ.³ flamma late fusa u_{z̄}: flamiae late fusae Ω.⁴ consternantur D^xz̄: consternuntur Ω.

mounted with difficulty from the plain on to the walls—overcoming the inequality of position, which was what they had chiefly dreaded—were making easy work of it on the level ground with an enemy that was no match for them, they forsook their towers and battlements, and, huddled all together in the market-place, made there one last brief attempt to redeem the day. Then, throwing down their arms, some eleven thousand four hundred men cast themselves on the mercy of the consul; about four thousand eight hundred had been slain.

Such were the operations at Cominium and at Aquilonia. In the place between, where a third battle had been looked for, the enemy were not encountered. Recalled by their leaders when seven miles from Cominium, they had not been present at either engagement. As the evening shadows began to fall, when they had already come within sight of the camp and of Aquilonia, they had been halted by the shouts, which were equally loud from both directions. But afterwards, from the direction of the camp, which had been fired by the Romans, the flames broke out so extensively, with their warning of an unmistakable disaster, as to keep them from advancing further, and throwing themselves on the ground at random, just where they were, without stopping to remove their arms, they passed the whole weary night in waiting for the dawn, which at the same time they dreaded. As the day broke, they were hesitating which way to march, when the Roman cavalry, who had pursued the Samnites when they left their town in the night, caught sight of the army, lying there without breastworks or outpost, and instantly routed them.

A.U.C. 14 firmatam. Conspecta et ex muris Aquiloniae ea ⁴⁶¹ multitudo erat iamque etiam legionariae cohortes sequebantur; ceterum nec pedes fugientes persequi potuit et ab equite novissimi agminis duecenti ferme
 et octoginta interfecti; arma multa pavidi ac signa 15 militaria duodeviginti reliquere; alio agmine incolumi, ut ex tanta trepidatione, Bovianum perventum est.

XLIV. Laetitiam utriusque exercitus Romani auxit et ab altera parte feliciter gesta res. Uterque ex alterius sententia consul captum oppidum diri-2 piendum militi dedit, exhaustis deinde tectis ignem iniecit; eodemque die Aquilonia et Cominium deflagravere et consules cum gratulatione mutua legionum
 3 suaque castra coniunxere. In conspectu duorum exercituum et Carvilius suos pro cuiusque merito
 laudavit donavitque; et Papirius, apud quem multiplex
 in acie, circa castra, circa urbem fuerat certamen, Sp. Nautium,¹ Sp. Papirium, fratri filium, et quatuor
 4 centuriones manipulumque hastatorum armillis aureisque coronis donavit: Nautium propter expedi-tionem qua magni agminis modo terruerat hostes, iuvenem Papiriū propter navatam cum equitatu et in proelio operam et nocte qua fugam² infestam 5 Samnitibus ab Aquilonia³ clam egressis fecit, centuriones militesque quia primi portam murumque Aquiloniae ceperant; equites omnes ob insignem

¹ Sp. Nautium Σ (chap. xl. § 8): p. nautium Ω.

² qua fugam Aldus: quia fugam Ω.

³ ab Aquilonia Σ: ab Aquiloniam (or -ā) PF: ad aquiloniā (or -am) Ω.

¹ Front-line troops.

² This interference was not mentioned at chap. xlii.
 § 4.

Their mass had been seen, too, from the walls of Aquilonia, and presently the legionary cohorts were likewise in pursuit of them. But the infantry could not overtake the fugitives, though the cavalry killed some two hundred and eighty of the rear-guard, who in their fright abandoned a quantity of arms and eighteen military standards. The rest of the column made good its escape, as safely as could be in so great a confusion, to Bovianum.

XLIV. The rejoicing in each of the Roman armies was enhanced by the good fortune the other had enjoyed. Each consul, with the approval of his fellow, made over the town he had captured to be sacked by the soldiers, and when the houses had been emptied, gave it to the flames. So on the same day Aquilonia and Cominium were destroyed by fire, and the consuls, amid the mutual exultations and good wishes of their legions and themselves, united their camps. In the full sight of both armies Carvilius commended his men as each had merited, and presented them with decorations; and Papirius, who had fought an engagement of many sorts—in line of battle, round the camp, and about the city—awarded armlets and wreaths of gold to Spurius Nautius and to his nephew Spurius Papirius, and to four centurions and a maniple of *hastati*¹—to Nautius for the charge by which, as though with a huge force, he had dismayed the enemy; to the young Papirius for his valiant service with the cavalry, both in the battle and in the night when he harassed² the flight of the Samnites after their secret departure from Aquilonia; to the centurions and soldiers because they had been the first to capture the gate and wall of Aquilonia. All the horsemen, in recog-

multis locis operam corniculis armillisque argenteis donat.

6 Consilium inde habitum iamne¹ tempus esset de-ducendi de Samnio² exercitus aut utriusque aut
7 certe alterius, optimum visum, quo magis fractae res Samnitium essent, eo pertinacius et infestius agere cetera et persequi ut perdomitum Samnium insequentibus consulibus tradi posset.

8 Quando iam nullus esset hostium exercitus, qui signis conlatis dimicaturus videretur, unum superesse belli genus, urbium oppugnationes, quarum per excidia militem locupletare praeda et hostem pro-9 aris ac focis dimicantem confidere possent. Itaque litteris missis ad senatum populumque Romanum de rebus ab se gestis diversi Papirius ad Saepinum, Carvilius ad Veliam³ oppugnandam legiones ducunt.

XLV. Litterae consulum ingenti laetitia et in curia et in contione auditae, et quadridui supplicatione publicum gaudium privatis studiis celebratum 2 est. Nec populo Romano magna solum sed peropportuna etiam ea victoria fuit, quia per idem forte
3 tempus rebellasse Etruscos allatum est. Subibat cogitatio animum quoniam modo tolerabilis futura Etruria fuisset si quid in Samnio adversi evenisset, quae coniuratione Samnitium erecta, quoniam ambo

¹ iamne Conway: cum iam nec *TDLA*₅: cum iam MPFu.

² de Samnio Weissenborn: ab (or a) Samnio Ω.

³ Veliam *A*² and *A*⁵ (mary.): uellam Ω.

nition of their distinguished conduct in many places, b.c. 293 he decorated with little silver horns and silver armlets.

A council of war was then held, and the question was debated whether the time were now come for withdrawing both armies, or at any rate one of the two, from Samnium. But they decided that the greater the damage they had inflicted on the Samnites, the more sharply and pertinaciously ought they to carry out such measures as remained, and to persist until they could hand over to the consuls who succeeded them a Samnium utterly subdued.

Since there was no longer any hostile army that seemed likely to engage in a pitched battle with them, one form of war alone remained, the storming of cities; by destroying which they would be able to enrich their troops with booty and crush their enemies, who would fight for their altars and their hearths. Accordingly, after dispatching letters to the senate and the Roman People recounting their achievements, the consuls parted company, Papirius marching to attack Saepinum, and Carvilius Velia.

XLV. The consuls' letters were listened to with vast exultation both in Senate-house and in assembly, and the general rejoicing found expression in the eagerness with which a thanksgiving of four days' duration was observed by individual citizens. For the Roman People, moreover, it was not only a great but also a very seasonable victory, since it happened that they got news at about the same time that the Etruscans had commenced hostilities again. Men wondered how they could have withstood Etruria if anything had gone wrong in Samnium; for the Samnite coalition and the diversion of both consuls

A.U.C.
461

consules omnisque Romana vis aversa in Samnium
esset, occupationem populi Romani pro occasione rebellandi habuisset.

- 4 Legationes sociorum, a M. Atilio praetore in senatum introductae, querebantur uri ac vastari
agros a finitimis Etruscis quod desciscere a populo
5 Romano nollent, obtestabanturque patres conscriptos ut se a vi atque iniuria communium hostium tutarrentur. Responsum legatis curae senatui futurum ne socios fidei suae paeniteret: Etruscorum prope-
diem eandem fortunam quam Samnitium fore.
6 Segnius tamen, quod ad Etruriam attinebat, acta res esset, ni Faliscos quoque, qui per multos annos in amicitia fuerant, allatum foret arma Etruscis 7 iunxisse. Huius propinquitas populi acuit curam patribus, ut fetiales mittendos ad res repetendas censerent; quibus non redditis ex auctoritate pa-8 trum iussu populi bellum Faliscis indictum est iussique consules sortiri uter ex Samnio¹ in Etruriam cum exercitu transiret.
9 Iam Carvilius Veliam² et Palumbinum et Hercu-laneum ex Samnitibus ceperat, Veliam³ intra paucos
10 dies, Palumbinum eodem quo ad muros accessit. Ad Herculanum etiam signis conlatis ancipiti proelio
et cum maiore sua quam hostium iactura dimicavit;
castris deinde positis moenibus hostem inclusit;
11 oppugnatum oppidum captumque. In his tribus

¹ Samnio M²P²F³uL³A²: samnito MTDA: samnitio L:
samntio PF:

² Veliam A²?: ueletiam Ω: uellam etiam u.

³ Veliam M¹ (or M²) T.A²: ueletiam DLA: uetiam M.

¹ The situation of none of these three towns is known.

and all Rome's military strength to Samnium had ^{B.C. 293} encouraged these other enemies to revolt while the Roman People had their hands full.

Deputations from the allies, introduced into the senate by Marcus Atilius the praetor, complained that their lands were being burnt and devastated by the neighbouring Etruscans, because they were not willing to forsake the Roman People, and besought the Conscript Fathers to defend them against the violence and injuries of their common foes. Answer was made to the deputations that the senate would see to it that the allies should not regret their loyalty: the Etruscans would shortly meet with the same fortune as the Samnites. Nevertheless, the Etruscan business would have dragged but for intelligence that the Faliscans likewise, who had for many years been friendly, were now united in arms with the Etruscans. The proximity of this people sharpened the anxiety of the Fathers, and they decreed that fetials should be dispatched to demand redress. On the refusal of this demand, war was declared against the Faliscans, by command of the people, on the authorization of the senate, and the consuls were bidden to cast lots to determine which should cross over with his army from Samnium into Etruria.

Carvilius had already taken Velia and Palumbinum and Herculaneum¹ from the Samnites—Velia in a few days' time, and Palumbinum the same day that he approached its walls. At Herculaneum he even fought a regular engagement, of which the issue was for some time in doubt and his losses heavier than the enemy's; he then pitched his camp and shut the enemy up within his walls, and finally stormed the town and captured it. In these three

LIVY

A.U.C.
461

- urbibus capta aut caesa ad decem milia hominum, ita ut parvo admodum plures caperentur. Sorti-entibus provincias consulibus Etruria Carvilio evenit secundum vota militum, qui vim frigoris iam in 12 Samnio non patiebantur. Papirio ad Saepinum maior vis hostium restitit. Saepe in acie, saepe in agmine, saepe circa ipsam urbem adversus eruptiones hostium pugnatum. Nec obsidio sed bellum ex aequo erat; non enim muris magis se Samnites quam armis ac viris moenia tutabantur.
 13 Tandem pugnando in obsidionem iustum coegit
 hostes obsidendoque vi atque operibus urbem ex-14 pugnavit. Itaque ab ira plus caedis editum capta urbe: septem milia quadringenti caesi, capta minus tria milia hominum. Praeda, quae plurima fuit con-gestis Samnitium rebus in urbes paucas, militi con-cessa est.

XLVI. Nives iam omnia oppleverant nec durari extra tecta poterat; itaque consul exercitum de-2 Samnio deduxit. Venienti Romam triumphus omnium consensu est delatus. Triumphavit in magis-tratu, insigni, ut illorum temporum habitus erat, 3 triumpho. Pedites equitesque insignes donis tran-siere ac transvecti sunt;¹ multae civicae coronae
 4 vallaresque ac murales conspectae; inspectata spolia

¹ transvecti sunt ζ: transuictis Μ?υζ: transuicti Ω.

¹ The Samnites lived for the most part in small, unfortified villages; cf. chap. xvii. § 2.

² The civic crown was conferred on a soldier who saved the life of a fellow-citizen; the others on the first man to mount the enemy's rampart and city wall, respectively.

places ten thousand or so of the enemy were taken B.C. 293 or put to death, with the prisoners very slightly outnumbering the slain. When the consuls cast lots for their commands, Etruria fell to Carvilius, thus answering the prayers of his soldiers, who could endure no longer the rigorous cold in Samnium. Papirius, before Saepinum, had a larger body of the enemy still to reckon with. His troops were many times engaged in regular battle, many times when marching, and many times about the city itself, in resisting the sorties of the enemy. It was not a siege, but war upon even terms; for the Samnites protected their walls with arms and men full as much as the walls protected them. At length, fighting hard, he forced the enemy to submit to a regular blockade, and by assault and siege-works captured the place. The exasperation of the Romans made the massacre more bloody when the city fell. Seven thousand four hundred were slain and fewer than three thousand were made prisoners. The booty, which was very great, since the Samnites had gathered their wealth together in a few cities,¹ was handed over to the soldiers.

XLVI. The ground was now covered with snow and men could no longer live out of doors. The consul therefore withdrew his army from Samnium. On his coming to Rome he was unanimously voted a triumph. This he celebrated, while still holding office, in a style which, for the circumstances of those days, was magnificent. Foot-soldiers and horsemen marched or rode past the crowds adorned with their decorations; many civic crowns were seen, and many that had been won at the escalade of a rampart or a city wall.² Men inspected the spoils that he had Samnitium et decore¹ ac pulchritudine paternis spoliis, quae nota frequenti publicorum ornatu locorum erant, comparabantur: nobiles aliquot captivi,² 5 clari suis patrumque factis, ducti. Aeris gravis travecta viciens centum milia et quingenta³ triginta tria milia; id aes redactum ex captivis dicebatur; argenti quod captum ex urbibus erat pondo mille⁴ octingenta⁵ triginta. Omne aes argentumque in aerarium conditum, militibus nihil datum ex praeda 6 est; auctaque ea invidia est ad plebem quod tributum etiam in stipendum militum conlatum est, cum, si spreta gloria fuissest captivae pecuniae in aerarium inlatae, et militi tum donum⁶ dari ex praeda et 7 stipendum militare praestari⁷ potuisset. Aedem Quirini dedicavit—quam in ipsa dimicione votam apud neminen veterem auctorem invenio neque hercule tam exiguo tempore perficere potuisset—ab dictatore patre votam filius consul dedicavit exor- 8 navitque hostium spoliis; quorum tanta multitudo fuit ut non templum tantum forumque iis ornaretur sed sociis etiam coloniisque⁸ finitimis ad templorum 9 locorumque publicorum ornatum dividerentur. Ab triumpho exercitum in agrum Vescinum,⁹ quia regio ea infesta ab Samnitibus erat, hibernatum duxit.

¹ decore M^xuL³A²: decorem MPT: decoram F: decor DLA.

² captivi F²uT²D³A²: actiui F: captivis Ω .

³ quingenta Gelenius: a Ω : ad T²u: omitted by L.

⁴ pondo mille Alschefski: p̄ eo (or other corruptions) Ω .

⁵ octingenta Alschefski: accc (or similar corruptions) Ω .

⁶ militi tum donum Walters and Conway: militi tum (or militum) Ω .

⁷ praestari F³uL³(or D⁵)A²(or A¹): praestare Ω .

⁸ coloniisque uA³Madrig: colonisque Ω .

taken from the Samnites, and compared them for splendour and beauty with those his father had won, which were familiar to them from being often used in the decoration of public places. A number of noble captives, famous for their own and their fathers' deeds, were led in the procession. Of heavy bronze there were carried past two million five hundred and thirty-three thousand pounds. This bronze had been collected, it was said, from the sale of captives. Of silver which had been taken from the cities there were eighteen hundred and thirty pounds. All the bronze and silver was placed in the Treasury, none of the booty being given to the soldiers. The ill-feeling which this gave rise to in the plebs was increased by the gathering of a war-tax to pay the troops, since, if the consul had forgone the glory of depositing the captured money in the Treasury, the booty would then have afforded the soldiers a donative, as well as providing for their pay. Papirius dedicated the temple of Quirinus. I find no ancient authority who states that it was vowed in the hour of conflict, nor indeed could it possibly have been completed in so short a time; his father had vowed it when dictator, and the son as consul dedicated it, adorning it with the spoils of the enemy. Of these there was such a great quantity that not only were the temple and the Forum bedecked with them, but they were distributed also amongst the allies and the neighbouring colonies for the decoration of their temples and public squares. After triumphing, Papirius led his army into the country of the Vescini—a district infested by the Samnites—to pass the winter.

⁹ Vescinum Sigonius (cf. chap. xx. § 1): uestinum MPFuDLA.

LIVY

a.u.c. 10 Inter haec Carvilius consul in Etruria Troilum ⁴⁶¹ primum oppugnare adortus quadringentos septuaginta
 ditissimos, pecunia grandi pactos ut abire inde 11 liceret, dimisit; ceteram multitudinem oppidumque ipsum vi cepit. Inde quinque castella locis sita 12 munitis expugnavit. Caesa ibi hostium duo milia quadringenti, minus duo milia capta. Et Faliscis pacem potentibus annuas indutias dedit, pactus centum milia gravis aeris et stipendum eius anni militi-13 bus. His rebus actis ad triumphum decessit, ut minus clarum de Samnitibus quam collegae triumphus fuerat 14 ita cumulo Etrusci belli aequatum. Aeris gravis tulit in aerarium trecenta octoginta milia; reliquo
 aere aedem Fortis Fortunae de manubiosis faciendam locavit prope aedem eius deae ab rege Ser. Tullio¹ 15 dedicatam, et militibus ex praeda centenos binos
 asses et alterum tantum centurionibus atque equitibus, malignitate collegae gratius accipientibus 16 munus, divisit. Favor consulis tutatus ad populum est L. Postumium legatum eius, qui dicta die a M.
 Scantio tribuno plebis fugerat legatione,² ut fama ferebat, populi iudicium; iactarique magis quam peragi accusatio eius poterat.

¹ Tullio u-, tullo Ω.

² legatione Perizonius: in legatione F: in legationem Ω.

¹ Site unknown.

² The temple was not mentioned by Livy in his account of that king's reign (I. xxxix.-xlvi.).

³ The course of events somewhat obscurely indicated here would seem to have been as follows:—When Scantius lodged the indictment, Carvilius procured Postumius immunity for a year by making him a legatus. On the expiration of the year some successor of Scantius revived the prosecution, but was induced by the friends of Carvilius to let the proceedings drop.

In Etruria meanwhile the consul Carvilius, having ^{B.C. 293} made his preparations to begin with an attack on Troilum,¹ agreed with four hundred and seventy of the wealthiest inhabitants for a large sum of money to let them go ; the rest of the population and the town itself he took by assault. He then stormed five fortresses situated in positions of great strength. There he slew two thousand four hundred of the enemy, making fewer than two thousand prisoners. He also granted a year's truce to the Faliscans—who came to him seeking peace—having stipulated for a hundred thousand of heavy bronze and the year's pay for his soldiers. After these exploits he departed to enjoy his triumph, which, though less distinguished than his colleague's had been for success against the Samnites, was a match for it when the Etruscan war was counted in. Of heavy bronze he lodged in the Treasury three hundred and eighty thousand pounds ; with what remained he contracted for a temple to Fors Fortuna to be erected from the general's spoils, near the temple of that goddess dedicated by King Servius Tullius,² while to the soldiers he apportioned from the rest of the booty one hundred and two asses each, and as much again to the centurions and horsemen. These allowances were all the more welcome because of the parsimony of his colleague. The consul's popularity served to shield his lieutenant Lucius Postumius from the people. He had been indicted by Marcus Scantius, a plebeian tribune, but had escaped trial before the people—so the story ran—through his appointment to the lieutenancy ; so that it was easier to threaten him than to carry home the accusation.³

XLVII. Exacto iam anno novi tribuni plebis magistratum inierant; hisque ipsis, quia vitio creati erant, quinque post dies alii¹ suffecti. Lustrum con-ditum eo anno est a P. Cornelio Arvina C. Marcio Rutulo² censoribus; censa capitum milia ducenta sexaginta duo trecenta viginti unum. Censores vicesimi sexti a primis censoribus, lustrum unde-3 vicesimum fuit. Eodem anno coronati primum ob-res bello bene gestas ludos Romanos spectarunt palmaeque tum primum translato e Graeco more victori-4 bus datae. Eodem anno ab aedilibus curulibus qui eos ludos fecerunt damnatis aliquot pecuariis, via a Martis silice ad Bovillas perstrata est.

5 Comitia consularia L. Papirius habuit; creavit consules Q. Fabium Maximi filium Gurgitem et D.
 Iunium Brutum Scaevam. Ipse Papirius praetor factus.

6 Multis rebus laetus annus vix ad solacium unius
 mali, pestilentiae urentis simul urbem atque agros, suffecit;³ portentoque iam similis clades erat, et libri aditi quinam finis aut quod remedium eius mali

¹ alii MuDzA^z: aliis Ω.

² Rutulo Conway: rutilo MP: rutilio Ω.

³ suffecit uA³; sufficit (or sub-) Ω.

¹ This was a sacrifice of purification performed as the final ceremony of the census-taking. “To close the lustrum” is therefore to complete the census.

XLVII. The year having now run its course, new B.C. 292 tribunes of the plebs came in, but owing to a flaw in their election they were themselves supplanted by others, five days later. The lustrum¹ was closed that year by the censors Publius Cornelius Arvina and Gaius Marcius Rutulus; there were enrolled two hundred and sixty-two thousand three hundred and twenty-one. The censors were the twenty-sixth pair from the first censors; the lustrum was the nineteenth. This year for the first time those who had been presented with crowns because of gallant behaviour in the war wore them at the Roman games, and palms were then for the first time conferred upon the victors, in accordance with a custom borrowed from the Greeks. The same year the curule aediles who gave those games procured the conviction of a number of graziers,² and with their fines paved the road from the temple of Mars as far as Bovillae.³

The consular comitia were held by Lucius Papirius, who declared the election of Quintus Fabius Gurges, the son of Maximus, and Decimus Junius Brutus Scaeva. Papirius himself was chosen praetor.

The year had been one of many blessings, which yet were hardly a consolation for one misfortune—a pestilence which ravaged both city and country-side. Its devastation was now grown portentous, and the Books were consulted to discover what end

² The men were probably fined for appropriating more than the legal maximum of public land. Compare chap. xxiii. § 13.

³ This refers to the Via Appia itself (which had apparently not been fully paved—perstrata—before) rather than to the footway referred to at chap. xxiii. § 12.

LIVY

A.U.C. 7 ab dis¹ daretur. Inventum in libris Aesculapium 462 ab Epidauro Romam arcessendum; neque eo anno,
quia bello occupati consules erant, quicquam de ea
re actum, praeterquam quod unum diem Aesculapio supplicatio habita est.

¹ ab dis Madrig: ab (or a) diis Ω.

¹ It was two or three years later and the pestilence was still raging when a députation under Q. Ogulnius was dis-

BOOK X. XLVII. 6-7

or what remedy the gods proposed for this misfortune. B.C. 292
It was discovered in the Books that Aesculapius must be summoned to Rome from Epidaurus; but nothing could be done about it that year, because the consuls were occupied with the war, except that for one day a supplication to that god was held.¹

patched to Epidaurus and brought away a serpent to Rome which passed for the god himself. A temple of Aesculapius was then erected on the island in the Tiber. See Summary of Book XI.

LIBRI X PERIOCHA

COLONIAE deductae sunt Sora et Alba et Carsioli. Marsi in deditio[n]em accepti sunt. Collegium augurum ampliatum est, ut essent novem, cum antea quaterni fuissent. Lex de provocatione ad populum a Murena eos. tertio tunc lata est. Duae tribus adiectae sunt, Aniensis et Terentina. Samnitibus bellum iudictum est et adversus eos saepe prospere pugnatum est. Cum adversus Etruscos Umbros Samnites Gallos P. Decio et Q. Fabio ducibus pugnaretur et Romanus exercitus in magno discrimine esset, P. Decius, secutus patris exemplum, devovit se pro exercitu et morte sua victoriam eius pugnae populo R. dedit. Papirius Cursor Samnitium exercitum, qui de iure iurando obstrictus, quo maiore constantia virtutis pugnaret, in aciem descenderat, fudit. Census actus est, lustrum conditum. Censa sunt civium capita cclxxii et cccxx.

¹ M. Valerius, according to Livy, chap. ix. § 3.

SUMMARY OF BOOK X

COLONIES were planted at Sora, at Alba, and at Carseoli. The surrender of the Marsi was received. The augural college was enlarged so that there were nine where before there had been four. A law about appeals was then for the third time laid before the people by the consul Murena.¹ Two tribes were added, the Auiensis and the Terentina. War was declared upon the Samnites and victories were often gained over them. When the Etruscans, Umbrians, Samnites, and Gauls were being fought under the leadership of Publius Decius and Quintus Fabius and the Roman army was in sore peril, Publius Decius, following the example of his father, devoted himself on behalf of the army and by his death gave the victory in that battle to the Roman People. Papirius Cursor routed the army of the Samnites, which had taken the field after binding itself with an oath, that it might fight with a more constant courage. The census was taken and the lustrum closed. There were enumerated 272,320 citizens.

LIBRI XI PERIOCHA

Cum Fabius Gurses cos. male adversus Samnites pugnasset et senatus de removendo eo ab exercitu ageret, Fabius Maximus pater deprecatus hanc fili ignominiam eo maxime senatum movit quod iturum se filio legatum pollicitus est, idque praestitit. Eius consiliis et opera filius consul adiutus caesis Samnitibus triumphavit; C. Pontium, imperatorem Samnitium, ductum in triumpho, securi percussit. Cum pestilentia civitas laboraret, missi legati ut Aesculapi signum Romam ab Epidauro transferrent, anguem, qui se in navem eorum contulerat, in quo ipsum numen esse constabat, deportaverunt; eoque in insulam Tiberis egresso eodem loco aedis Aesculapio constituta est. L. Postumius consularis, quoniam, cum exercitui praeesset, opera militum in agro suo usus erat, damnatus est. Pacem potentibus Samnitibus¹ foedus quarto renovatum est. Curius Dentatus cos. Samnitibus caesis et Sabiniis, qui rebellaverant, viuis et in deditioinem acceptis bis in eodem magistratu triumphavit. Coloniae deductae sunt Castrum Sena Hadria. Triumviri capitales tunc primum creati sunt. Censu acto lustrum conditum est. Censa sunt civium capita ~~CCCLXXII.~~ Plebs propter aes alienum post² graves et longas seditiones ad ultimum secessit in Ianiculum, unde a Q. Hortensio dictatore deducta est; isque in ipso magistratu decessit. Res praeterea contra Vulsinieuses gestas continet, item adversus Lucanos, contra quos auxilium Thurinisi³ ferre placuerat.

¹ potentibus Samnitibus a late MS.: potentibus MSS.

² post Sigoni ex. vet. lib.: propter MSS.

³ Thurinisi Pighius (Plin. N. H. xxxiv. 32, Vat. Max. I. viii. 6, Dion. Hal. xix. xiii): tyrrhenis or tyrrinis MSS.

SUMMARIES

SUMMARY OF BOOK XI

WHEN Fabius Gurges the consul had fought an unsuccessful battle with the Samnites and the senate was debating his removal from the command, Fabius Maximus his father begged them to spare his son this ignominy. What particularly moved the senate was his promise to go out as his son's lieutenant, which he did. Aided by his advice and services, his son the consul defeated the Samnites and triumphed. Gains Pontius, the general of the Samnites, was led in the triumph and beheaded. When the state was troubled with a pestilence, the envoys dispatched to bring over the image of Aesculapius from Epidaurus to Rome fetched away a serpent, which had crawled into their ship and in which it was generally believed that the god himself was present. On the serpent's going ashore on the island of the Tiber, a temple was erected there to Aesculapius. The consular Lucius Postumius was convicted of having used the labour of soldiers on his own land when in command of the army. The Samnites sought peace and the treaty with them was renewed for the fourth time. Curius Dentatus the consul having slaughtered the Samnites and conquered the Sabines, who had revolted, and received their submission, triumphed twice in the same year of office. Colonies were established at Castrum, Sena, and Hadria. A board of three to deal with capital offences was then chosen for the first time. The number of citizens was returned as 272,000. Because of their debts, the plebs, after serious and protracted quarrels, seceded to Janiculum, whence they were brought back by Quintus Hortensius the dictator, who died before the expiration of his term. The book contains also campaigns with the Vulscienses and likewise with the Lucanians, against whom the Romans had voted to assist the people of Thurii.

LIBRI XII PERIOCHA

Cum legati Romanorum a Gallis Senonibus interfecti essent, bello ob id Gallis indicto, L. Caecilius praetor ab his cum legionibus caesus est. Cum a Tarentinis classis Romana direpta esset, iuviro qui praeerat classi occiso, legati ad eos a senatu, ut de his iniuriis quererentur, missi pulsati sunt. Ob id bellum his indictum est. Samnites defecerunt. Adversus eos et Lucanos et Brittios et Etruscos aliquot proeliis a pluribus ducibus bene pugnatum est. Pyrrhus, Epirotarum rex, ut auxilium Tarentinis ferret, in Italiam venit. Cum in praesidium Reginorum legio Campana cum praefecto Decio Vibellio missa esset, occisis Reginis Regium¹ occupavit.

LIBRI XIII PERIOCHA

VALERIUS LAEVINUS cos. parum prospere adversus Pyrrhum pugnavit, elephantorum maxime inusitata facie territis militibus. Post id proelium cum corpora Romanorum qui in acie ceciderant Pyrrhus inspiceret, omnia versa in hostem invenit² populabundusque ad urbem Romanam processit. C. Fabricius missus ad eum a senatu, ut de redimendis captiuis ageret, frustra ut patriam desereret a rege temptatus est. Captiui sine pretio remissi sunt. Cineas legatus a Pyrro ad senatum missus petit ut componendae pacis causa rex in urbem recuperetur. De qua re cum ad frequentiorem senatum referri placeisset, Appius Claudius, qui propter valetudinem oculorum iam diu consiliis publicis se abstinuerat,

¹ Regium vulg. : regnum MSS.

² invenit vulg. : venit MSS.

SUMMARIES

SUMMARY OF BOOK XII

ROMAN envoys having been put to death by the Senonian Gauls, war was for that reason declared against the Gauls, and Lucius Caecilius the praetor and his legions were cut to pieces by them. The Tarentines plundered a Roman fleet, slew the duumvir who commanded it, and maltreated the envoys whom the senate had dispatched to them to complain of these wrongs. On this account war was declared against them. The Samnites revolted. Several successful battles were fought with them and with the Lucanians and the Brittii¹ and the Etruscans, under a number of generals. Pyrrhus, king of the Epirots, came to Italy to help the Tarentines. A Campanian legion, commanded by Decius Vibellius, being sent to protect the people of Regium,² put the inhabitants to death and seized the city.

SUMMARY OF BOOK XIII

THE consul Valerius Laevinus fought a losing engagement with Pyrrhus, the soldiers being greatly terrified by the strange sight of the elephants. After this battle, when Pyrrhus was looking at the bodies of the Romans who had fallen, he found that they all faced their enemies, and laying waste the country, advanced towards the city of Rome. Gaius Fabricius, being sent to him by the senate to treat for the ransom of the prisoners, was in vain solicited by the King to forsake his country. The prisoners were released without a price. Cineas, having been dispatched by Pyrrhus as an envoy to the senate, asked that the King might be received into the City for the purpose of arranging terms of peace. On its having been resolved to refer this proposal to a fuller meeting of the senate, Appius Claudius, who by reason of a weakness of the eyes had long abstained from public venit in curiam et sententia sua tenuit ut id Pyrrho negaretur. Cn. Domitius censor primus ex plebe lustrum econdidit. Censa sunt civium capita ~~ccxxxxvii~~ ~~ccxxii~~. Iterum adversus Pyrrhum dubio eventu pugnatum est. Cum Carthaginiensibus quarto foedus renovatum est. Cum C. Fabricio consuli is qui ad eum a Pyrrho transfugerat polliceretur venenum se regi daturum, cum indicio ad regem remissus est. Res praeterea contra Lucanos et Bruttios, Samnites et Etruscos¹ prospere gestas continet.

LIVY

LIBRI XIII PERIOCHA

PYRRHUS in Siciliam traiecit. Cum inter alia prodigia fulmine deiectum esset in Capitolio Iovis signum, caput eius per haruspices inventum est. Curius Dentatus eos, cum² dilectum haberet, eius qui citatus non responderat bona primus vendidit; iterum Pyrrhum ex Sicilia in Italiam reversum vicit et Italia expulit. Fabricius censor P. Cornelium Rufinum consularem senatu movit, quod is x pondi argenti facti haberet. Lusto a censoribus condito censa sunt civium capita ~~ccxxi~~ ~~ccxxiii~~. Cum Ptolemaeo, Aegypti rege, societas iuncta est. Sextilia, virgo Vestalis, damnata incesti viva defossa est. Coloniae deductae sunt Posidonia et Cosa. Carthaginiensium classis auxilio Tarentinis venit, quo facto ab his foedus violatum est. Res praeterea contra Lucanos et Bruttios et Samnites feliciter gestas et Pyrrhi regis mortem continet.

¹ et Etruscos vulg. : etruscos MSS.

² eos, cum Rossbach : 'is' cum MSS.

SUMMARIES

business, entered the Curia and by his speech prevailed on the senators to deny Pyrrhus his request. Gnaeus Domitius was the first plebeian censor to close the lustrum. The number of the citizens was returned as 287,222. There was a second battle with Pyrrhus, of an indecisive nature. The treaty with the Carthaginians was renewed for the fourth time. When a deserter from Pyrrhus promised Gaius Fabricius the consul that he would poison the King, Fabricius sent him back to the King with the story of his guilt. The book contains also successful campaigns against the Lucanians and the Bruttians, the Samnites and the Etruscans.

SUMMARY OF BOOK XIV

PYRRHUS crossed into Sicily. When, amongst other prodigies, the statue of Jupiter in the Capitol had been thrown down by a thunderbolt, its head was discovered by haruspices. The consul Curius Dentatus, on holding a levy, was the first to sell the goods of any man who did not answer the summons; he likewise defeated Pyrrhus, who had returned from Sicily into Italy, and drove him out of Italy. The censor Fabricius removed Publius Cornelius Rufinus, an ex-consul, from the senate, because he had in his possession ten pounds of wrought silver. When the censors had closed the lustrum, there were found to be 271,224 citizens. An alliance was made with Ptolemy, king of Egypt. Sextilia, a Vestal Virgin, was found guilty of unchastity and was buried alive. The colonies of Posidonia and Cosa were established. A fleet of the Carthaginians came to the assistance of the Tarentines, an act which constituted a violation of the treaty. The book also contains successful wars with the Lucanians, the Bruttians, and the Samnites, and the death of King Pyrrhus.

LIBRI XV PERIOCHA

VICTIS Tarentinis pax et libertas data est.¹ Legio Campana quae Regium occupaverat obsessa deditio facta securi percussa est. Cum legatos Apolloniatum ad senatum missos quidam iuvenes pulsassent, dediti sunt Apolloniatisbus. Picentibus victis pax data est. Colouiae deductae Ariminum in Piceno, Beneventum in Samnio.² Tunc primum populus R.³ argento uti coepit. Umbri et Sallentini⁴ vieti in ditionem accepti sunt. Quaestorum numerus ampliatus est, ut esseut octo.⁵

LIBRI XVI PERIOCHA

ORIGO Carthaginiensium et primordia urbis eorum referuntur. Contra quos et Hieronem, regem Syracusauorum, auxilium Mamertinis ferendum senatus censuit, cum de ea re inter suadentes ut id fieret dissuadentesque contentio fuisse; transgressisque tunc primum mare equitibus⁶ Romanis adversus Hieronem saepius bene pugnatum. Petenti pax data est. Lustrum a censoribus conditum est. Censa sunt civium capita ccclxxxii cxxxiii. Decimus Iunius Brutus munus gladiatorium in honorem defuncti patris primus edidit. Colonia Aesernia deducta est. Res praeterea contra Poenos et Vulsinios⁷ prospere gestas continet.

¹ data est vulg.: nata est MSS.

² Beneventum in Samnio editio princeps: Beneventum MSS.

³ populus R. vulg.: populus MSS.

⁴ Sallentini vulg.: salleni (or saleni or salerni) MSS.

⁵ ut essent octo Sigonius: ut essent MSS.

⁶ equitibus MSS.: exercitibus Weissenborn.

SUMMARIES

SUMMARY OF BOOK XV

THE Tarentines, having been vanquished, were granted peace and liberty. The Campanian legion which had seized Regium¹ was besieged and forced to surrender and its members were beheaded. Envoys from Apollonium to the senate were beaten by certain youths, who were given up to the people of Apollonium. The Picentes were defeated and granted peace. Colonies were sent out to Ariminum in the Picentian district and to Beneventum in Samnium. Then for the first time the Roman People began to use silver.² The Umbrians and the Sallentines were conquered and their submission was received. The number of quaestors was enlarged, so that there were eight.

SUMMARY OF BOOK XVI

THE origin of the Carthaginians and the beginnings of their city are described. Against them and against Hiero, king of the Syracusans, the senate determined to assist the Mamertines, after a bitter debate about the proposal between its advocates and its opponents. Then for the first time Roman cavalry³ crossed the sea, and fought a number of victorious engagements against Hiero. On his suing for peace, it was granted him. The lustrum was closed by the censors. There were enumerated 382,234 citizens. Decimus Junius Brutus was the first to give a gladiatorial exhibition, in honour of his dead father. The colony of Aesernia was planted. The book contains also successful operations carried on against the Carthaginians and the Vulsinii.

¹ sc. Rhegium. ² i.e. silver coinage.

³ Or "armies," if we accept Weissenborn's emendation.

LIBRI XVII PERIOCHA

Cs. CORNELIUS consul a classe Punica circumventus et per fraudem, veluti in conloquium evocatus, captus est. C. Duillius consul adversus classem Poenorum prospere pugnavit, primusque omnium Romanorum duecum navalis victoriae duxit triumphum. Ob quam causam ei perpetuus quoque honos habitus est, ut revertenti a cena tibicine canente funiale praeserretur. L. Cornelius consul in Sardinia et Corsica contra Sardos et Corsos et Hannonem, Poenorum ducem, feliciter pugnavit. Atilius Calatinus¹ cos. cum in locum a Poenis circumcessum temere exercitum duxisset, M. Calpurni. tribuni militum, virtute et opera evasit, qui cum ccc militibus eruptione facta hostes in se converterat. Hannibal, dux Poenorum, victa classe cui praefuerat, a militibus suis in crucem sublatus est. Atilius Regulus cos. victis navali proelio Poenis in Africam traiecit.

LIBRI XVIII PERIOCHA

ATILIUS REGULUS in Africa serpentem portentosae magnitudinis cum magna clade militum occidit, et cum aliquot proeliis bene adversus Carthaginenses pugnasset, successorque ei a senatu prospere bellum gerenti non mitteretur, id ipsum per litteras ad senatum scriptas questus est, in quibus inter causas petendi successoris erat² quod agellus eius a mercennariis desertus esset. Quaerente deinde Fortuna ut magnum utriusque casus exemplum in Regulo

¹ Calatinus vulg. : calasinus MSS.

² successoris erat vulg. : successoris MSS.

¹ cf. Cic. Cato Maior, § 44.

SUMMARIES

SUMMARY OF BOOK XVII

THE consul Gnaeus Cornelius was surrounded by a Carthaginian fleet and was made prisoner by fraud, having been lured out as to a colloquy. The consul Gaius Duilius fought a successful engagement with the fleet of the Carthaginians and was first of all Roman leaders to triumph for a naval victory. For this reason he was granted a perpetual honour—that a waxen torch should be borne before him and a flautist should make music when he returned from dining out.¹ The consul Lucius Cornelius fought successfully in Sardinia and Corsica against the Sardinians and Corsicans and against Hanno, the Carthaginian general. The consul Atilius Calatinus having rashly led his army into a place surrounded by the Carthaginians, escaped through the valiant services of Marcus Calpurnius, a tribune of the soldiers, who with three hundred men broke through the enemy and drew their attack upon himself. Hannibal, a Carthaginian general, on the defeat of the fleet which he commanded, was crucified by his own soldiers. Atilius Regulus the consul, having beaten the Carthaginians in a naval battle, crossed into Africa.

SUMMARY OF BOOK XVIII

ATILIUS REGULUS in Africa slew a serpent of portentous size with the loss of many of his soldiers. Having fought several successful battles with the Carthaginians, and finding that owing to his good fortune in the prosecution of the war the senate was not disposed to send anyone to succeed him, he wrote to the senate and complained of this very thing, alleging, amongst other reasons for desiring a successor, that his little farm had been deserted by the labourers hired to work it. Afterwards, on Fortune's seeking to exhibit in the case of Regulus an proderetur, arcessito a Carthaginiensibus Xanthippo, Lacedaemoniorum duce, victus proelio et captus est. Res deinde a ducibus Romanis omnibus terra marique prospere gestas deformaverunt naufragia classium. Tib. Coruncanius primus ex plebe pontifex maximus creatus est. M'. Valerius Maximus P. Sempronius Sophus¹ censores cum senatum legerent, xvi senatu moverunt. Lustrum considerunt, quo censa sunt civium capita ccxcvii DCCXCVII. Regulus missus a Carthaginiensibus ad senatum ut de pace, et si eam non posset impetrare, de commutandis captivis ageret, et iureiurando adstrictus redditum se Carthaginem, si commutari captivos non placuisset, utrumque negandi auctor senatui² fuit, et cum fide custodita reversus esset, suppicio a Carthaginiensibus de eo sumpto perit.

LIBRI XVIII PERIOCHA

CAECILIUS METELLUS rebus adversus Poenos prospere gestis speciosum egit triumphum, xiii ducibus hostium et cxx elephantis in eo ductis. Claudius Pulcher cos. contra auspicia profectus—iussit mergi pullos, qui cibari nolebant—infeliciter adversus Carthaginenses classe pugnavit, et revocatus a senatu iussusque dictatorem dicere Claudiu Gliciam dixit, sortis ultimae hominem, qui coactus abdicare se magistratu postea ludos praetextatus spectavit. A. Atilius Calatinus³ primus dictator extra Italiam exercitum

¹ The censors' names, variously corrupted in the MSS., are corrected from the Fasti Capitolini, C.I.L. i², p. 24.

² senatui vulg. : senatus MSS.

³ calatinus vulg. : calanus MSS.

¹ The Regulus story inspired Horace to write his finest ode (Carm. III. 5).

SUMMARIES

example of both extremes, the Carthaginians sent for Xanthippus, a general of the Lacedaemonians, who defeated Regulus in battle and made him prisoner. After that all the Roman generals gained victories on land and sea; but these were marred by the wreck of fleets. Tiberius Coruncanius was the first to be chosen pontifex maximus from the plebs. Manius Valerius Maximus and Publius Sempronius Sophus, when as censors they were passing on the senate, removed sixteen from that order. They closed the lustrum and the number of citizens returned was 297,797. Regulus being sent by the Carthaginians to the senate to treat for peace, or, failing that, for an exchange of prisoners, and being bound by an oath to return to Carthage, if the Romans would not exchange, advised the senate to grant neither request, and having loyally returned, was tortured to death by the Carthaginians.¹

SUMMARY OF BOOK XIX

CAECILIUS METELLUS, after a prosperous campaign against the Carthaginians, triumphed brilliantly, having thirteen of the enemy's generals and a hundred and twenty elephants in his procession. The consul Claudio Pulcher having set out in opposition to the auspices—he ordered the chickens to be drowned, when they would not feed²—fought an unsuccessful naval engagement with the Carthaginians, and on being recalled by the senate and directed to name a dictator, named Claudius Glicia, a man of the basest sort, who afterwards, when he had been forced to abdicate the office, witnessed the games in his purple-bordered toga. Aulus Atilius Calatinus was the first dictator to lead an army out of Italy. An

² According to Cicero, De Natura Deorum, II. 7, Claudius had the fowls thrown into water, "that they might drink, since they would not eat."

LIVY

duxit. Commutatio captivorum cum Poenis facta est. Coloniae deductae sunt Fregenae, in agro Sallentino Brundisium. Lustrum a censoribus conditum est. Censa sunt civium capita ccxli ccxii. Claudia, soror P. Claudi, qui contemptis auspiciis male pugnaverat, a ludis revertens cum turba premeretur, dixit: Utinam frater meus viveret; iterum classem duceret. Ob eam causam multa ei dicta est. Duo praetores tunc primum creati sunt. Caecilius Metellus, pontifex maximus, A. Postumium¹ consulem, quoniam idem et flamen Martialis erat, cum is ad bellum gerendum proficisci vellet, in urbe tenuit nec passus est a sacris recedere. Rebus adversus Poenos a pluribus ducibus prospere gestis, summam victoriae² C. Lutatius cos. victa ad Aegates insulas classe Poenorum imposuit. Petentibus Carthaginiensibus pax data est. Cum templum Vestae arderet, Caecilius Metellus, pontifex maximus, ex incendio saera rapuit. Duae tribus adiectae sunt, Velina et Quirina.

LIBRI XX PERIOCHA

FALISCI cum rebellassent, sexto die perdomiti in deditio-nem venerunt. Spoletium colonia deducta est. Adversus Liguras tunc primum exercitus promotus est. Sardi et Corsi cum rebellassent, subacti sunt. Tuccia,³ virgo Vestalis, incesti damnata est. Bellum Illyriis propter unum ex legatis qui ad eos missi erant occisum indictum est, subactique in ditionem venerunt. Praetorum nummerus ampliatus est, ut essent iii. Galli transalpini qui in Italiam intruperant caesi sunt. Eo bello populum

¹ A. Postumium rulg.: aurelium postumium MSS.

² victoriae rulg.: victorianum MSS.

³ Tuccia Sigonius ex cet. lib.: lucia (or Luccia) MSS.
Tucia ed. prin.

SUMMARIES

exchange of prisoners with the Carthaginians was effected. Colonies were founded at Fregenae¹ and in the Sallentine country at Brundisium. The lustrum was closed by the censors. 241,212 citizens were registered. Claudia, the sister of Publius Claudius, who had been defeated after making light of the auspices, being jostled by the crowd while returning from the games, exclaimed. "O that my brother were alive to command another fleet!" For this she was fined. Then for the first time two praetors were elected. Caecilius Metellus, the pontifex maximus, kept Aulus Postumius, the consul, in the City, since he was also the flamen of Mars, when he desired to go forth to war, nor would he suffer him to forsake his sacred functions. After a number of generals had gained successes against the Carthaginians, Gaius Lutatius crowned the victory by defeating the Carthaginian fleet off the Aegatian Islands. The Carthaginians sued for peace and it was granted them. When the temple of Vesta was burning, Caecilius Metellus, the pontifex maximus, rescued the sacred objects from the flames. Two tribes were added, the Velina and the Quirina.

SUMMARY OF BOOK XX

THE Faliscans, having revolted, were on the sixth day subdued and permitted to surrender. A colony was planted at Spoletium. Then for the first time an army marched against the Ligurians. The Sardinians and Corsicans having revolted were reduced to subjection. Tuccia, a Vestal Virgin, was convicted of unchastity. War was declared against the Illyrians on account of the murder of one of the envoys who had been dispatched to them, and they were subdued and received in surrender. The number of praetors was enlarged to four. Transalpine Gauls who had made an incursion into Italy were cut to pieces. The author states that in that war the ¹ Near the coast about due W. of Rome.

LIVY

R. sui Latinique nominis cccc armatorum¹ habuisse dicit Exercitibus Romanis tunc primum trans Padum ductis Galli Insubres aliquot proeliis fusi in ditionem venerunt. M. Claudius Marcellus eos. occiso Gallorum Insubrium duce, Vertomaro,² opima spolia rettulit. Histri subacti sunt. Iterum Illyri cum rebellassent, domiti in ditionem venerunt. Lustrum a censoribus ter³ conditum est. Primo lustro censa sunt civium capita cclxx ccxii. Libertini in quattuor tribus redacti sunt, eum antea dispersi per omnes fuissent, Esquilinam Palatinam Suburam Collinam. C. Flaminius censor viam Flaminiam muniit⁴ et circum Flaminium exstruxit. Coloniae deducatae sunt in agro de Gallis⁵ capto Placentia et Cremona.

¹ cccc armatorum Mommsen: accc MSS.

² Vertomaro MSS.: Virtomane Propertius IV. x. 41 (codex N.): Viridomaro ed. prin. (cf. Serv. Verg. Aen. VI. 855).

³ ter Madvig: per MSS.

⁴ C. Flaminius censor viam Flaminiam muniit Sigonius muniit MSS.

⁵ de gallis Frobenius: gallis MSS.

SUMMARIES

Roman People had under arms 800,000 men, of their own and of the Latin name. Then for the first time Roman armies crossed the Po, and defeating the Insubrian Gauls in several battles, received their submission. The consul Marcus Claudius Marcellus having slain the chief of the Insubrian Gauls, Vertomarus, brought back the spoils of honour.¹ The Histrians were subjugated. The Illyrians having gone to war a second time were defeated and their submission was received. The census was thrice taken by the censors. In the first census there were registered 270,212 citizens. . . . The freedmen were assigned to four tribes, whereas before they had been dispersed through them all—the four being the Esquilina, the Palatina, the Suburana, the Collina. The censor Gaius Flamininus built the Flaminian Way and the Flaminian Circus. Colonies were established in the territory taken from the Gauls, at Placentia and Cremona.

¹ The “spoils of honour” were those taken by the general in personal combat with the general of the enemy. See I. x. 6.

INDEX OF NAMES

(The References are to Pages.)

- ACERRANI, 70
Acheron, 92; Acherusia aqua, 92
Aegates insulae, 558
Aegyptus, 92, 550
Aelius Paetus, P., 60, 186, 388; L., 446; Aelius Tubero, Q., 390
Aemilius, Mam. (dictator 434 B.C.), 288, 292; Aemilius Mamercinus, L., 2, 4; Aemilius Mamercinus, L. (same as above), 66, 78 (bis), 92, 244; Aemilius, T. (praetor 413 B.C.), 4; Aemilius Mamercinus, Ti., 48, 50 (ter), 52; Aemilius Cerretanus, Q., 142 (ter); Aemilius Papus, M., 188; Aemilius Barbula, Q., 242 (ter), 246, 276, 280, 284; Aemilius Paulus, M., 362 (bis), 368; Aemilia lex (434 B.C.), 288, 290, 292, 294, 296
Aenaria, 86
Aequi, 236, 344, 346 (bis), 348 (bis), 354, 360, 362 (bis), 390; Aequicium bellum, 362
Aequicoli, 402
Aesculapius, 542 (bis), 546 (bis)
Aesernia, 552; Aeserninus ager, 476
Africa, 554 (bis)
Aharna, 452
Alba, 360, 514
Albani, 18
Aletrinas (collective), 332; Aletrinas populus, 338
Alexander Epipi rex, 10, 68 (bis), 92, 230, 238; Alexander Magnus, 10, 98, 224, 226 (ter), 228 (ter), 230 (bis), 232 (bis), 234 (ter), 236, 238 (bis), 240 (ter); Alexandria, 92
Allifae, 98, 308, 330
Amitemnum, 508
Anagnini, 332 (bis), 338
Aniensis tribus, 392, 544
Annius Setinus, L., 10, 12, 16, 18, 20, 158
Antiochus, 240
Antium, 4, 50, 54, 58, 236; Antiates, 2, 48 (bis), 58, 60, 242; Antiates Volsci, 52; Antias ager, 48; populus, 2, 58
Antonius, M., 68
Anxur, 84
Apollinare sacrum, 384
Apolloniates, 552 (bis)
Appenninus, 460
Appia via, 354
Appianus exercitus, see Claudius, Ap.
Apuleius, Q., 376, 390
Apulia, 154, 164, 206, 208, 216, 231, 242 (quater), 266, 498, 502; Apuli, 94, 98, 104, 144, 216, 236, 354, 412 (bis); Teates Apuli, 242; Apulus ager, 144; Apulum bellum, 142
Aquilonia, 504, 508, 510 (bis), 520, 522, 526 (bis), 528 (quater)
Ardeas ager, 48
Aretini, 376
Aricini, 52, 58
Ariminum, 552
Arpi, 208, 210 (ter)
Arpinum, 344; Arpinates, 360
Arretium, 308, 500; Arretini, 284, 306
Asia, 224, 238 (bis)
Astura, 52, 54
Atheneae, 232
Atilius Regulus, M. (cos. 335 B.C.), 64, 66; Atilius Regulus, M. (cos., 294 B.C.), 480, 488, 492, 502, 505, 532, 556; Atilius, L. (trib. pl. 311 B.C.), 276; Atilius Calatinus, A., 554, 556
Atina, 272; Atinas ager, 508
Attius Clausus, 386
Aufidena, 402

INDEX OF NAMES

- Aulius Cerretanus, Q., 142, 218, 220, 246, 248 (bis), 250 (bis)
 Aurunca, see Suessa; Aurunci, 69 (quater), 272
 Ausona, 258; Ausones, 62, 66, 158, 258 (bis), 260
 Aventinus, 290
- BELLONA, 36, 430 (bis)
 Beneventum, 270, 552
 Bovianum, 279 (bis), 280, 342 (bis), 402 (bis), 520, 528
 Bovillae, 310
 Brundisium, 362, 558
 Brutii (Brittii), 548, 550 (bis): Brutii fines, 94; Brutiae legiones, 92
 Brutus, see Iunius
- CACILIUS, L., 548; Caecilius Metellus, 556, 555 (bis)
 Caedicius, C., 514, 518
 Caere, 309; Caerites, 370
 Caiatia, 476
 Calatia, 164, 272, 332
 Calavius, Ovius, 184, 262; Novius, 262; A. (son of Ovius), 184
 Cales, 62, 64, 66 (bis), 158; Caleni, 432; Calenus ager, 432
 Callifae, 98
 Calpurnius Pi-o Frugi, L. (the annalist), 340, 399; Calpurnius, M., 551
 Camars (= Clusium), 454
 Camertes Umbri, see Umbri
 Camillus, see Furius
 Campania, 236, 258, 270, 310, 430, 436, 489; Campanus (collective), 8; Campani, 4 (bis), 6, 8 (quater), 14, 16, 42, 46, 60, 158, 182, 322, 460, 472; Campanus ater, 86, 349, 432, 436; campus, 88; finis, 182; hostis, 8; populis, 46, 48; Campana defectio, 266; legio, 548, 552; quaestio, 262; Campani campi, 266; equites, 46
 Campus Sceleratus, see Sceleratus
 Cannae, 238
 Canusini, 242
 Capena porta, 444
 Capitolium, 14, 16 (bis), 132, 144, 174 (bis), 344, 384, 444
 Capua, 20, 44, 46, 60, 88, 182 (quietae), 242 (bis), 258, 260, 262, 266, 506
 Carseoli, 368, 402, 544 (Carsioli)
 Carthago, 556; Carthaginenses, 349, 550 (bis), 552, 554, 556 (quater), 558
 Carvilius, Q., 332; Carvilius Maximus Sp. (his son), 392, 508 (bis), 510, 528, 530, 532, 534, 538
 Castor, 48
 Castrum, 546
 Caudium, 164, 194, 198 (bis), 204, 206, 214, 218 (bis), 238, 266; Caudina clades, 220, 300; pax, 162, 178, 184, 188, 204, 314; Candini saltus, 184
 Caudinae furcae, 354; furculae, 164, 170, 200, 214, 310; legiones, 206
 Ceres, 446
 Cesennia, 344
 Chalcis, 84
 Charilaus, 100 (bis)
 Cilnium genus, 368, 376
 Cimetra, 412
 Ciminius mons, 304 (bis); saltus, 304
 Ciminia silva, 300 (bis), 310, 314, 446; Ciminii saltus, 302
 Cineas, 548
 Cingilia, 112
 Claudius, Ap. (the decemvir), 290
 Claudius, Ap. (censor 312, cos. 30 and 296 B.C.), 274 (quater), 288 (bis), 290, 292 (bis), 296, 298; 330 (ter), 340, 352, 354, 380, 382, 386 (ter), 398, 412, 414 (ter), 422 (bis), 424, 426 (ter), 428 (quater), 430, 438, 441 (bis), 450, 452 (ter), 454, 458, 476 (ter), 478, 502, 548; Appianus exercitus, 424; Claudius Inregillensis, C., 62
 Claudius Hortator, C., 62; Claudius Marcellus, M. (cos. 331), 70, 90
 Claudius Marcellus, M. (conqueror of Gauls at Clastidium, 222 B.C.), 560; Claudius Glicia, 556; Pulcher, 556; Claudius Quadrigarius, Q. (annalist), 76, 178; Claudius, P., 558; Claudia (sister of P.), 558
 Cleonymus, 362 (ter), 366
 Cleopatra (queen of Alexander of Epirus), 96
 Clusium, 452, 458 (bis), 462; Clusini 474; Clusini transfugae, 460
 Cluviae, 280; Cluviana oppugnatione, 280
 Collina porta, 62; tribus, 560
 Cominium, 508, 510 (bis), 514, 518, 524 (bis), 526 (bis), 528
 Cominius, L., 114
 Concordia, 350

INDEX OF NAMES

- onsentia Bruttiorum, 94, 96
 oranus ager, 74
 ornelius Rufinus, P. (dictator 332 B.C.), 66; Cornelius Arvina, A. (cos. 343, 333, dictator 322 B.C.), 68, 146, 152, 154, 200, 202, 478; Cornelius Scapula, P. (= P. Cornelius Scipio Barbatus, cos. 328, dictator 306 B.C.), 84, 340 (bis), 350; Cornelius Lentulus, L. (cos. 327, dictator 320 B.C.), 86, 218; Cornelius Maluginensis, M. (censor suffectus 392 B.C.), 296; Cornelius Arvina, P. (son of Aulus, cos. 306 and 288; censor 294 B.C.), 310 (?), 332 (bis), 338, 540; Cornelius Ser. (cos. 303 B.C.), 360; Cornelius Scipio, L. (cos. 298 B.C.), 398, 400, 410, 454, 458 (bis), 470, 514, 520 (ter), 554; Cornelius Rufinus, P. (cos. 290), 550; Cornelius, Cn. (cos. 270 and 260 B.C.), 554; Cornelia (poisoner, d. 331 B.C.), 72; Cornelii, 228 or-ica, 554; Corsi, 554, 555
 ortona, 308
 oruncanius, Ti., 556
 osa, 550
 remera, 314
 remona, 560
 umae, 84, 236; Cumani, 60, 84
 urius Dentatus, M., 228, 546
 utina, 112
 yrus, 226

AREUS, 230 (bis)
 ecius Mus, P. (cos. 340 B.C.), 10, 34, 36, 42 (bis), 158, 198, 380, 382, 468; Decius Mus, P. (cos. 312 B.C.), 272, 274, 320, 324 (ter), 326 (bis), 340 (bis), 352, 380 (bis), 388, 406 (quater), 410, 412 (bis), 414, 416, 418, 420, 422, 430, 440 (ter), 442, 446 (bis), 448 (ter), 454 (bis), 456 (quater), 462, 464, 466 (bis), 468 (bis), 470, 472, 480, 551 (bis); Decii duo, 226, 228; Decianus exercitus, 474, 476; Decius, M. (trib. pl. 311 B.C.), 278
 ei (or Di) Manes, see Manes ei Indigites, see Indigites
 iana, 462
 iivi Noveniles, see Noveniles
 odonaens, see Iuppiter
 omitus, Cn., 68, 390; Domitius Calvinus, Cn. (his son), 390, 550

 Duillius, K., 62; C., 554
 Duronia, 508

 EGNATIUS, Gelliū, 420, 428, 436, 472
 Epidaurus, 542, 546
 Epirus, 92 (bis), 96, 230; Epirotæ, 548
 Esquilina tribus, 560
 Etruria, 236 (bis), 280, 284 (bis), 304 (bis), 308 (bis), 312, 324 (bis), 326, 366, 376, 394 (bis), 396 (bis), 406, 414, 416 (bis), 420, 424 (ter), 426 (ter), 436 (bis), 438, 446, 448, 450 (bis), 454, 456 (bis), 458, 460, 474, 476, 480, 498, 500 (ter), 502 (bis), 504, 530, 532, 534, 538; Etruscus (collective), 376, 394; Etrusci, 274 (bis), 284, 286 (bis), 288, 298 (bis), 300 (ter), 304, 306, 312, 316 (ter), 318, 322, 326 (bis), 334, 368, 374 (bis), 376, 392, 394, 396, 400, 402, 404, 416 (bis), 428, 438, 460, 462, 464, 474, 478, 500, 506, 530, 532 (ter), 544, 548, 550; Etruscus ager, 394; Etruscum bellum, 272, 328, 394, 428, 430, 450, 454, 538; foedus, 326; Etruscae litteræ, 302. See also Tusci
 Euboica Chalcis, 84
 Europa, 224

FABIUS Dorsuo, M. (cos. 315 B.C.), 10, 64, 66, 126, 128 (bis); Fabius Maximus Rullianus, Q. (cos. 322, 310, 308, 297, 295; dictator 315, 301; censor 304 B.C.; son of above), 70, 112, 114, 116, 118 (bis), 120 (bis), 122, 124 (quater), 126 (bis), 130, 134, 136 (ter), 138 (quater), 146, 158, 180, 188, 226, 246 (bis), 288 (ter), 310, 324, 326, 328, 330 (bis), 332 (bis), 340, 352 (bis), 354, 356, 368 (bis), 390, 398, 402, 404 (ter), 408 (bis), 410, 412 (ter), 414 (ter), 420 (bis), 422, 430, 440 (ter), 442, 446 (quater), 448, 450 (bis), 452 (bis), 454 (bis), 456 (bis), 458, 460, 462, 464, 470 (bis), 472 (ter), 474, 476, 480, 502, 540, 546; Fabius Ambustus, M. (magister equitum 322 B.C., and brother of Quintus), 146, 150 (bis), 154, 300, 304, 312 (bis); Fabius Ambustus, C. (magister equitum 315 B.C., and brother of Quintus), 250, 254; Fabius, Caeso (brother of Quintus)

INDEX OF NAMES

- tu.), 300; Fabius Maximus Gurges, Q. (cos. 293 and son of Quintus), 408, 473, 540, 544, 546; Fabii, 228
 Fabraterni, see Volsci
 Fabricius, C., 548, 559 (bis)
 Falerii, 400, 406; Falisci, 532 (bis), 538, 558; Falernus ager, 46 (bis), 50, 86, 430, 438 (ter); Falerna tribus, 242, 354; Faliscus ager, 400, 460; Faliscus exercitus, 462
 Fas, 18
 Faenia curia, 314
 Fenectani campi, 43
 Ferentani, 220
 Ferentinum, 420 (bis); Ferentinas (collective), 332; Ferentinas populus, 338
 Feritrum, 486
 Flaminius, C., 560; Flaminius circus, 560; Flaminia via, 560
 Flavius, M., 84, 144; Cn. (scriba), 318, 350 (bis), 352, 354; Flavia rogatio, 144
 Filius Flaccina, M., 240, 262, 264 (bis), 270
 Forentum, 242
 Formianus (collective), 88; Formiani, 60;
 Formianus ager, 476; populus, 88
 Fors Fortuna, 53²; Fortuna, 464, 554
 Fregellae, 84, 88 (bis), 158, 270 (bis);
 Fregellani, 206; Fregellana arx, 270, 282
 Fregenae, 558
 Frentani, 316
 Fresilia, 368
 Frusinates, 360
 Fulvius, L., 146, 244; Fulvius Curvus, M. (cos. suffectus 205 B.C., son of abote), 342; Fulvius Paetus, M. (cos. 299 B.C.), 390; Fulvius, Cn. (cos. 298 B.C.), 370, 398, 400, 402 (bis), 460, 462, 474; Fulvius Curvus, C. (aed. pl. 295 B.C.), 416
 Fundanus (collective), 88; Fundani, 60, 74, 76 (quinquies); Fundanus ager, 76; dux 71; populus, 76, 88
 Furius Päculius, C. (cos. 441, censor 435 B.C.), 290, 292; Furius Camillus, M. (dictator 396 B.C.), 130, 176, 218; Furius, L. (consular trib. 381 and 370 B.C.), 130; Furius Camillus, L. (son of M., dictator 350 and 345 B.C.), 52, 54 (ter), 110, 112 (*bi), 228; L. (grandson of M., cos. 338 and 335, and praetor 318 B.C.), 242
 GABINUS cinetus, 36; cultus, 380
 Galli, 58, 68, 78 (bis), 174, 176, 181, 202, 236, 364, 392, 394, 402, 416, 436, 438, 440, 458 (bis), 460 (bis), 462 (quater), 464 (bis), 468 (quater), 470, 472, 474, 478, 544; Galli Insubres, 560 (bis); Senones Galli, 458, 548; Galli transalpini, 558
 Gallicus equitatus, 466; tumultus, 78, 394, 460; Gallica acies, 466, 470; clades, 326; Gallicum bellum, 68, 78; Gallici tumultus, 272; Gallica auxilia, 420; Gallus hostis, 460
 Geganius, M., 290, 292
 Gellius, Statius, 342
 Geilius Egnatius, see Egnatius
 Geminus, see Maecius
 Genucius, L., 360; C., 388
 Germanici saltus, 300
 Graeci, 86 (bis), 88, 90, 98, 100 (bis), 102, 104 (bis), 232, 236, 362, 366
 Graecus mos, 540; Graecae litterae, 302
 HADRIA, 546; Hadriaticus sinus, 362
 Hadriaticum mare, 366
 Hannibal (general in first Punic war), 554; (the great Hannibal), 238
 Hanno, 554
 Heraclea, 94
 Herculaneum, 532 (bis)
 Hercules, 274, 344, 424, 442
 Hernici, 332 (bis), 334 (bis), 338 (ter), 344, 346, 360; Hernicus civis, 332
 Hernicum bellum, 334: nomen 332, 344
 Hiero, 552 (bis)
 Histri, 362, 569
 Horatius, M., 502
 Hortensius, Q., 546
 Hostilius, Tullus, 18, 128
 IANICULUM, 546
 Janus, 36
 Illyrii, 362, 588, 560
 Imbrinum, 114
 India, 230; Indi, 236, 238
 Indigites Di, 36
 Interamna Sucasina, 272, 498; Interamnas ager, 508
 Italia, 92 (bis), 98, 228, 230 (bis), 362 (ter), 416 (bis), 550 (bis), 556
 Julius, C., 296
 Junius Brutus, L. (cos. 509 B.C.), 132

INDEX OF NAMES

- Iunius Brutus Scaeva, D. (cos. 325 B.C.), 50, 110; D. (cos. 293 B.C., his son), 524, 540, 552; Iunius Bubulcus, C. (cos. 317, 313, 311, master of the horse 312 and 309, censor 307, and dictator 302 B.C.), 242 (ter), 270, 272, 274, 276, 280, 314, 320 (bis) 338, 362 (bis); Iunii (exactores regum), 228
- Iuno, 366
- Iuppiter, 14, 18 (ter), 20, 24, 36, 278, 282, 384, 444, 450, 504; Iuppiter Dodonaeus, 92; Iuppiter Stator, 496, 504; Iuppiter Victor, 472 (bis), 524; cella Iovis, 444
- Ius, 18
- LACEDAEMONIUS dux, 362
- Lacones, 366
- Lanuvium, 59; Lanuvini, 52, 58 (bis); Lanuvini municipes, 58
- Lares, 36
- Latium, 10, 12, 14, 16 (ter), 44, 46 (bis), 52, 54 (ter), 56 (bis); Latinus (a Latin), 18; Latini, 6 (bis), 8 (quater), 10, 12, 16, 18, 22, 24, 30, 36, 38 (quater), 40 (quater), 44 (quinquies), 46 (bis), 48, 50, 56, 58, 60, 158 (quater); Latinus ager, 46 (bis), 50; centurio, 34 (bis); dilectus, 32; dux, 6; eques, 24; Latina via, 498; Latinum bellum, 468; imperium, 16; nomen, 10, 460, 486, 560; Latin i populi, 50, 54, 60, 332; Latinae feriae, 46; Latina oppida, 54
- Laurentes, 46 (bis)
- Lautulae, 250, 258 (bis)
- Lentulus, L., 174
- Liburni, 362
- Licinius Stolo, C. (magister equitum 368 B.C.), 386; Licinius Macer, C. (the annalist), 314, 350, 390; Licinia lex, 380
- Ligures, 558
- Liris, 438
- Livius, L., 192 (trib. pl. 320 B.C.), 192; Livius Denter, M., 362, 388, 466, 468
- Longula, 314
- Lua Mater, 4
- Lucani, 68, 72, 94 (quinquies), 98, 104, 106, 110, 236, 398 (ter), 400 (bis), 422, 546, 548, 550 (bis); Lucanus, 104; Lucanus exsul, 92, 96; hostis, 402; populus, 398; Lucana cohors, 482; Lucani exsules 94; montes, 230; Lucanae legiones, 94
- Luceres, 378
- Luceria, 164, 206 (ter), 208, 210 (bis), 211 (ter), 216 (quater), 218 (quater), 222, 260 (bis), 486, 498, 502 (bis), 504; Lucerini, 166, 260; Lucerinus finis, 488
- Lutatius, C., 558
- MACEDONIA, 230; Macedones, 230, 232, 234, 236, 240 (ter); Macedonicae phalanges, 30
- Maecius, Geminus, 22, 24, 26; Octavius, 518; Maecia tribus, 68
- Maelius, Q., 192
- Maenius, C., 52 (bis), 262 (bis), 294
- Maleventum, 270
- Mamertini, 552
- Manes (di or dei Manes), 20, 466, 468
- Manlius Torquatus, T. (dictator 353, 349, 320, cos. 347, 344, 340 B.C.), 10, 16 (bis), 18, 20, 34 (bis), 38, 40, 46, 60, 118, 158 (ter), 226, 228, 382; Manlius, T. (his son), 22, 24, 26 (ter), 138; Manlius Torquatus, T. (son of last-named, cos. 299 B.C.), 390, 394; L. (perhaps son of last-named), 458; Manliana imperia, 28, 132
- Marcius Rutulus, C. (cos. 357, 352, 344, 342, in 356 B.C. first pleb. dict.), 226, 386, 502; Marcius Rutulus, O. (his son, trib. pleb. 311, cos. 310, pontifex and augur 292, censor 294 and 265 B.C.), 276, 288, 308, 312, 314, 388 (bis), 470, 540; Marcius Tremulus, Q. (cos. 306, 288 B.C.), 332, 334, 336, 338, 340; Marcianus miles, 336
- Maritimus Circus, 332
- Marrucini, 110; Marrucini Marsi, 348; Mars, 42, 44, 88, 282, 340, 446, 464, 540 (Martis aedes); Mars pater, 36; Martialis flamen, 588; Martius lupus, 462; Martia gens, 462
- Marsi, 20, 110, 236, 312, 324 (bis), 354, 368 (ter), 344: see also Marrucini
- Mater Terra, see Terra
- Materina, 328
- Meduacus amnis, 364
- Menapii, 94
- Metapontum, 96
- Mevania, 326

INDEX OF NAMES

- Milionia, 368, 454, 486
 Milionius, 44
 Minatius, Staius, 434
 Minturnae, 40, 46, 258, 438
 Minucius, L., 130; Ti., 340 (bis), 342
 (ter): Minucius Faesus, M., 388;
 Minucia Vestalis, 62, 158
 Molossis, 92
 Murena (error for M. Valerius), 544
 Murgantia, 418, 420
- NAR, 392
 Narnia, 390, 392
 Nautius, Sp., 244, 514, 518, 525 (bis)
 Neapolis, 84, 90, 236: Neapolitani
 158; Neapolitanum foedus, 104
 Nepete, 406
 Nequinum, 390, 392 (bis)
 Nerulum, 242
 Nola, 102, 270, 272; Nolani, 86; Nolanus hostis, 100; Nolana multi-tudo, 272; Nolanimites, 86
 Nomentani, 58
 Norbani, 2: Norbanus ager, 74
 Novensiles Divi, 36
 Nuceria Alfaterna, 324; Nucerinus
 ager, 310
 Numisius Circeiensis, I., 10, 44
 Nymphius, 100, 102 (bis)
- OCRICULANI, 330
 Ogulni, Q., and Cn., 378, 441
 Olympias, 98
 Opimius Pansa, L., 482
 Orcus, 320
 Osca lingua, 432
 Ostia, 236; Ostien-is ager, 48
 Oufentina tribus, 354
 Ovius, see Paccius
- PACCIUS, Ovius, 506
 Padus, 569
 Paeligni, 14, 20, 236, 324, 346, 354,
 474, 478; Paelignus ager, 474
 Paestum, 68
 Palaeopolis, 84, 86 (bis), 90, 102; Palae-politani, 100, 104
 Palatium, 74, 80; Palatina tribus, 560
 Palumbinum, 532 (bis)
 Pandosia, 92 (bis) Papirius Crassus, L. (praetor 339, cos.
 336 and 339, praef. urb. 325 B.C.), 48, 62, 70, 72, 74, 138, 149; M.
 (dictator 332 B.C.), 68: Papirius Cursor, L. (mag. equitum 339, cos.
- 332, 320, 319, 315, 313, dictator
 325 and 309 B.C.), 48, 92, 112, 114,
 118, 122, 126 (bis), 128 (ter), 134
 (bis), 136, 142, 158, 188, 206, 208,
 210, 212, 216 (bis), 218 (ter), 222,
 226, 228, 270, 296 (bis), 312 (bis),
 314 (bis), 320, 354, 390, 504;
 Papirius Mugillanus, L. (cos. 326),
 92, 220; Papirius, L. (generator), 198, 158; Papirius Cursor, L. (son of Cursor, cos. 293 and 272 B.C.), 504, 508, 510 (bis), 512, 530, 534, 540, 544; Papirius, Sp. (nephew of last-named), 514, 528 (ter): Papiria
 tribus, 144; Papiriana saevitia, 368
- Papius Brutulus, 154 (ter)
 Parthi, 232
 Patavium, 364 (bis): Patavini, 364
 Pedum, 50 (ter), 52 (bis), 54 (bis);
 Pedani, 50, 52, 58
 Pentri Samnites, see Samnites
 Persae, 230, 236, 238
 Perses, 240
 Perusia, 308 (bis), 322 (bis), 500;
 Perusini, 474, 476 (bis)
 Philippus, 240
 Picenum, 552; Picentes, 236, 396 (bis), 552
 Piso, see Calpurnius
 Pithecurae (insulae), 84 Plautius (Hypsaeus), C. (cos. 347 and 341 B.C.), 2 (bis), 78, 274, 276, 288, 292; Plautius Venox, L. (praet.
 322, cos. 330 and 318 B.C.), 72, 76,
 89 (bis), 154, 240, 242; Plautius
 Proculus, P. (cos. 328 B.C.), 84
 Plesina, 368
 Plistica, 244, 246, 248 (bis)
 Poeni, 238, 552, 554 (ter), 556, 558
 (ter); Punica classis, 554; res,
 240; Punicum bellum, 228, 238,
 240 Poetelius, C. (tr. pleb. 358, cos. 346 and 332 B.C.), 92, 270, 272 (bis); M.
 (cos. 314 B.C.), 252, 268 (ter)
 Pollia tribus, 144 (ter)
 Pompeii, 310
 Pompeius Magnus, 226
 Pontiae, 272 (bis), 354 (Pontia)
 Pontius, Herennius, 162, 170, 172,
 204, 216, 218; C., 162, 172, 176,
 200 (bis), 204, 216, 218, 546
 Popilius, M., 244
 Porcia lex, 388
 Porsinna, 202, 416

INDEX OF NAMES

- Fo^sidonⁱa, 550
 Postumius, Sp. (cos. 334 and 321 B.C.), 66, 68, 90, 162, 188, 190 (bis), 192, 193 (bis), 200, 202 (bis), 204, 254; Postumius Megellus, L. (grandson of above, cos. 305, 294, and 291 B.C.), 240 (quater), 342 (bis), 469, 462, 489 (bis), 484 (bis), 498, 502, 538, 546; Postumius, A. (cos. 242), 558
Fotitii, 276 (bis): Potitia gens, 274
 Praenestinus, 224; Praenestini, 52, 58; Praenestinus populus, 50; praetor, 224
 Privernum, 2, 74, 76 (quater), 78, 80 (bis); Privernas, 82; Privernatis, 2, 78, 80 (ter), 82 (ter), 84, 144, 158; Privernas ager, 46 (bis): populus, 88; senatus, 80; bellum, 74, 78
 Ptolemaeus, 550
 Publilius Philo, Q. (cos. 352, 339, 327, 320, and 315 B.C.), 48 (bis), 62, 66, 68, 86 (bis), 90, 100, 104, 158, 188 (bis), 206, 208, 210, 216, 226, 266; Publilius, C., 108, 158; Publilius, T. (anq 300 B.C.), 388
 Pudicitia Patricia, 442, 444; Plebeia, 444
 Pupiniensis ager, 326
 Pyrrhus, 548 (ter), 550 (sexies)

QUINTILIUS, Cn., 72
 Quinetius Cincinnatus, L., 130; Quinetius, T. (III vir col. ded. 334 B.C.), 66; Quinetius, L. (tr. mil. 326 B.C.), 162; Quinctii, 228
 Quirinus, 36, 80, 536 (Quirini aedes); Quirina tribus, 558
 Quirites, 20, 22, 36 (quater), 50, 200, 264, 388, 390, 404, 468

RAMNES, 378
 Regillus Iacus, 18, 24
 Regulus, see Atilius
 Rhegium (Regium), 518, 552; Regini (Regini), 518 (bis)
 Roma, 2 (et passim): Romani, 2 (et passim): Romanus populus, 2 (et passim): Romana civitas, 46; classis, 310; disciplina, 242; gens, 172; ignominia, 218; indoles, 184; plebs, 106; res, 56, 240; virtus, 184, 214, 282; Romanum bellum 240; imperium, 58, 134; nomen, 232; Romani pueri, 302; Romana ingenia, 184; iura, 242
 Romulea, 418 (bis), 420
 Romulus, 504
 Rostra, 60
 Rufrium, 98
 Ruminalis ficus, 444
 Rusellanus ager, 370, 500

SABINI, 312, 546: Sabinus advena, 356; Sabellus ager, 4; Sabellae cohortes, 430
 Sacer mons, 290
 Saepium, 530, 534
 Sallentini, 330, 362 (bis), 552; Sallentinus ager, 362, 558
 Salus, 336, 382
 Samnium, 66, 68, 88, 98, 102, 110, 114, (bis), 138, 144, 206, 216, 236, 274, 280 (bis), 284, 310, 312, 324, 326, 328, 332, 334, 338, 340, 344 (ter), 400, 402, 406 (bis), 412, 414, 418, 420 (bis), 422 (ter), 424 (bis), 426, 430 (bis), 432, 456, 454, 474, 480 (bis), 484, 500, 502 (ter), 504 (bis), 508 (bis), 530 (ter), 532 (bis), 534 (bis), 552; Samnis (a Samnites), 204, 496; (collective), 88, 146, 152, 190, 198, 222, 244, 248, 258, 334, 338, 378, 410, 416, 492; Samnites (quinquies), 4, 6 (quater), 8 (ter), 10, 12, 14 (bis), 16, 20, 68, 74 (ter), 80, 86, 88 (ter), 98, 100 (bis), 104 (bis), 102 (quater), 106 (bis), 110 (bis), 114, 116, 140 (ter), 142 (septies), 146 (bis), 148, 150, 152, 154, 158 (bis), 162, 164 (bis), 170 (bis), 174, 184 (quater), 190 (bis), 192, 194 (bis), 196 (bis), 200 (bis), 204 (ter), 206 (quater), 210 (quater), 212 (bis), 216, 218 (bis), 220 (bis), 222 (bis), 240, 244 (ter), 246 (quater), 248 (quinquies), 250, 252, 258 (ter), 260 (bis), 266 (bis), 268 (bis), 270 (ter), 272 (bis), 280 (ter), 306, 308, 310, 318, 320, 322 (quater), 324 (bis), 330, 332 (ter), 336, 338, 340, 342, 344 (quater), 346, 354 (quater), 360, 396 (bis), 398 (ter), 400 (quater), 402 (ter), 408 (bis), 410 (ter), 412, 414, 418 (ter), 420 (bis), 428 (bis), 432, 434 (ter), 436, 438, 460, 462 (bis), 464 (bis), 468 (bis), 470 (bis), 472 (ter), 474 (ter), 476 (ter), 478 (ter), 480 (bis), 482, 484 (bis), 486, 488, 494 (quater), 496 (bis), 498 (bis), 504, 506 (bis), 508, 510

INDEX OF NAMES

- (ter), 514, 516 (bis), 518, 520 (bis), 522, 524, 526, 528, 532 (bis), 534 (bis), 536 (bis), 538, 544 (ter), 546 (quinquies), 548, 550 (bis); Pentri Samnites, 280; Samnis ager, 8; civis, 202; hostis, 8, 106; populus, 6, 200; Samnites milites, 86
Sangus, see Semo.
Sardinia, 554; Sardi, 554, 558
Saticula, 244 (bis), 246, 248 (bis); Saticulani, 244
Satricum, 2 (bis), 220; Satricanus (collective), 222; Satricani, 206 (bis), 220, 222
Scantius, M., 538
Scaptia tribus, 68
Sceleratus campus, 62
Semo Sangus, 80 (bis)
Sempronius, Sophus, P., 288, 344 (bis), 358, 392, 436, 438, 556
Sena, 546
Setini, 2; Setinus ager, 74; horo, 18
Sextilia (virgo Vestalis), 550
Sextius, L., 386
Sibylla, 384
Sicilia, 550 (bis)
Silicini, 4 (bis), 6 (ter), 121, 4, 16, 69 (bis), 62, 64, 66 (bis); Silicinus ager, 68, 406; hostis, 8
Signia, 10; Signini, 84
Sinope (= Sinuessa), 433
Sinuessa, 46, 438
Sipontum Apulorum, 94
Solonius ager, 48
Sora, 248 (bis), 252, 256 (bis), 258 (bis), 332, 344, 360 (bis), 484 (bis), 544; Soranus ager, 406, 484; transfuga, 254; Sorana arx, 252
Sotimus, 96
Spoletium, 558
Stagna Inferna, 92
Stellatis ager, 476; campus, 340; Stellates campi, 478
Suburana tribus, 560
Sucasina, see Interamna
Suessa Aurunca, 60, 272 (bis), 354; Suessana cohors, 482
Suessula, 88; Suessulanii, 60
Sulpicius Longus, C. (cos. 337, 323, and 314; dictator 312 B.C.), 60, 62, 142 (ter), 226, 252, 268 (bis), 274; Sulpicius Saverrio, P. (cos. 304, censor 299 B.C.), 344, 392, 398
Sutrium, 284, 288 (bis), 298, 304, 406; Sutrini, 284
Syracusani, 552
TARENTUM, 100, 106; Tarentini, 92, 94, 100, 104, 110, 212 (quater), 548 (bis), 550, 552; Tarentini legati, 212 (bis)
Tarquinienensis (collective), 324
Tarquinius, L., 18; Tarquinii (the Tarquin kings), 292
Teanenses, 242
Teates Apuli, see Apuli
Tellus, 36, 466; Tellus mater, 468
Terentina tribus, 392, 544
Terina Eruttiorum, 94
Terra mater, 20
Thebae, 232
Thesprotius sinus, 92
Thessali, 236
Thuriae (in Sallentinis), 362 (bis)
Thurii, 236; Thurini, 546
Tiberis, 58 (bis), 80, 416, 546
Tibur, 278 (bis); Tiburites, 52, 54, 58; Tiburtini, 278; Tiburs populus, 50
Tifernum (in Samnium), 340, 406; Tifernus mons, 474, 478
Titienses, 378
Titinius, M., 362
Torquatus, see Manlius
Trebonius, T., 514, 518
Trebulani, 360
Trifanum, 46
Troilum, 538
Tubero, see Aelius
Tuccia (virgo Vestalis), 558
Tullius, Ser. (rex), 538
Tullus, see Hostilius
Tusci (see also Etrusci), 286, 308, 328, 420, 474
Tusculani, 58, 144 (ter); Tusculanus populus, 144; Tusculani equites, 22
UFENTINA tribus, 242
Umbria, 236 (bis), 304, 326 (bis), 360, 390, 420; Umbri, 308, 326 (quater), 330, 354, 392, 436, 438, 440, 458, 460 (ter), 464, 474, 478, 544, 552; Camertes Umbri, 302 (bis); Umber hostis, 460
VACCI Prata, 74
Vaccus, see Vitruvius
Valerius, L. (cos. 449 B.C.), 502
Valerius, M. (= Corvus?), 10, 36; Valerius Corvus, M. (cos. 248, 346,

INDEX OF NAMES

- 343, 335, 308, and 299 B.C.), 64
(quater), 68, 138, 188, 226, 228; Valerius Publicola, P. (mag. eq.
332 B.C.), 68; Valerius Flaccus (or Potitus?), C. (cos. 331 B.C.), 70; Valerius Flaccus, L. (mag. eq. 331 and 320 B.C.), 72, 188; Valerius Maximus, M. (cos. 312, censor 307
B.C.), 272, 320, 324 (bis), 340, 368
(bis), 376 (bis), 388, 396, 408, 473
(possibly this is Corvus); Valerius Laevinus, P. (cos. 280 B.C.), 543; Valerius Maximus, M'. (dictator
260 B.C.), 556; Valerii (exactores
regum), 228; Valeria lex, 388
Vaticanus ager, 460; exercitus, 462
Veii, 78, 176
Velia, 530, 532 (bis); Velina tribus, 558
Velitrae, 10, 53; Veliterni, 52, 58, 80,
141; Veliternus populus, 50
Veneti, 364, 366
Venus, 478
Virginius, A., 412; Virginia (daughter), 442, 444
Vertomarus, 560
Verulanus (collective), 332; Verulanus
populus, 338
Vescia, 44, 258; Vescini, 430; Vescinus
ager, 438, 476, 536; saltus, 438
Vescri, 34, 468
Vesta, 558 (templum Vestae); Vestalis
virgo, 62, 550, 558
Vestini, 110, 112 (bis), 236, 366;
Vestinus populus, 110 (bis)
Vesuvius mons, 34
Veturius Calvinus, T., 66, 162, 190, 198, 354
Vibellius, Decius, 548
Victoria, 484
Vitruvius Vacceus, 74 (bis), 76 (bis), 78 (ter), 80
Volaterrae, 400
Volcanus, 42, 350
Volsci, 2 (bis), 10, 16, 41 (bis), 54, 82,
236, 272; Volsci Antiates, 52;
Fabraterni, 72; Volscus ager, 360;
Volscum nomen, 46
Volsinii, 500, 552 (Vulsinii): Volsini-enses, 324, 546 (Vulsinienses);
Volsiniensis ager, 500
Voltumnus, 46, 432, 476
Volumnius, L., 228, 330 (bis), 340,
414 (bis), 420, 422 (ter), 424 (quater),
426 (ter), 428 (quinquies), 430, 436,
438, 440, 442, 454 (bis), 456, 461,
474 (bis), 476, 514, 520 (bis)

XANTHIPPUS, 556

PRINTED IN GREAT BRITAIN BY RICHARD CLAY & SONS, LIMITED, BUNGAY, SUFFOLK.

CAUDIUM

The larger red line indicates the Samnite position according to Nissen

The smaller blue line indicates the march of the Romans according to Kromayer & Veith

The broken blue line indicates the march of the Romans according to Nissen

The continuous

The Loeb Classical Library

VOLUMES ALREADY PUBLISHED

Latin Authors.

- APULEIUS. The Golden Ass (Metamorphoses), W. Adlington (1566)
Revised by S. Gaselee. (3rd Imp.)
- AUSONIUS. H. G. Evelyn White. 2 Vols.
- BOETHIUS: TRACTS AND DE CONSOLATIONE PHILOSOPHIAE. Rev. H. F. Stewart and E. K. Rand.
- CAESAR: CIVIL WARS. A. G. Peskett. (2nd Imp.)
- CAESAR: GALlic WAR. H. J. Edwards. (4th Imp.)
- CATULLUS. F. W. Cornish; TIBULLUS. J. P. Postgate; and PERVIGILIUM VENERIS. J. W. Mackail. (7th Imp.)
- CICERO: DE FINIBUS. H. Rackham. (2nd Imp.)
- CICERO: DE OFFICIS. Walter Miller. (2n.l Imp.)
- CICERO: DE SENECTUTE, DE AMICITIA, DE DIVINATIONE. W. A. Falconer.
- CICERO: LETTERS TO ATTICUS. E. O. Winstedt. 3 Vols. 3rd Imp.
- CICERO: PRO ARCHIA POETA, POST REDITUM IN SENATU, POST REDITUM AD QUIRITES, DE DOMO SUA, DE HARUS. PICUM RESPONSIS, PRO PLANCIO. N. H. Watts.
- CLAUDIAN. M. Platnauer. 2 Vols.
- CONFessions OF ST. AUGUSTINE. W. Watts (1631). 2 Vols. (3rd Imp.)
- FRONTINUS, STRATEGEMS AND AQUEDUCTS. C. E. Bennett.
- FRONTO: CORRESPONDENCE. C. R. Haines. 2 Vols.
- HORACE: ODES AND EPODES. C. E. Bennett. (6th Imp.)
- JUVENAL AND PERSIUS. G. G. Ramsay. (2nd Imp.)
- LIVY. B. O. Foster. 13 Vols. Vols. I, II and III. (Vol. I 2nd Imp.)
- LUcretius. W. H. D. Rouse.
- MARTIAL. W. C. Ker. 2 Vols.
- OVID: HEROIDES AND AMORES. Grant Showerman. (2nd Imp.)
- OVID: METAMORPHOSSES. F. J. Miller. 2 Vols. (3rd Imp.)
- OVID: TRISTIA AND EX PONTO. A. L. Wheeler.
- PETRONIUS. M. Heseltine; SENECA: APOCOLOCYNTOSIS. W. H. D. Rouse. (5th Imp.)
- PLAUTUS. Paul Nixon. 5 Vols. Vols. I—III. (Vol. I 2nd Imp.)
- PLINY: LETTERS. Melmoth's Translation revised by W. M. L. Hutchinson. 2 Vols. (2nd Imp.)
- PROPERTIUS. H. E. Butler. (3rd Imp.)
- QUINTILIAN. H. E. Butler. 4 Vols.
- SALLUST. J. C. Rolfe.
- SCRIPTORES HISTORIAE AUGUSTAE. D. Magie. 4 Vols. Vols. I and II.
- SENECA: EPISTULAE MORALES. R. M. Gummere. 3 Vols. (Vol. I 2nd Imp.)
- SENECA: TRAGEDIES. F. J. Miller. 2 Vols. (2nd Imp.)
- SUETONIUS. J. C. Rolfe. 2 Vols. (3rd Imp.)
- TACITUS: DIALOGUS. Sir Wm. Peterson, and AGRICOLA AND GERMANIA. Maurice Hutton. (3rd Imp.)
- TACITUS, HISTORIES. Clifford H. Moore. 2 Vols. Vol. I.
- TERENCE. John Sargeaunt. 2 Vols. (5th Imp.)
- VELLEIUS PATERCULUS AND RES GESTAE DIVI AUGUSTI. F. W. Shipley.
- VIRGIL. H. R. Fairclough. 2 Vols. (Vol. I 4th Imp. Vol. II 3rd Imp.)

Greek Authors.

- ACHILLES TATIUS. S. Gaselee.
AENEAS TACTICUS, ASCLEPIODOTUS AND ONASANDER.
AESCHINES. C. L. Adams. [The Illinois Club.
AESCHYLUS. H. Weir Smyth. 2 Vols.
APOLLODORUS. Sir James G. Frazer. 2 Vols.
APOLLONIUS RHODIUS. R. C. Seaton. (3rd Imp.)
THE APOSTOLIC FATHERS. Kiropp Lake. 2 Vols. (Vol. I 4th Imp. Vol. II 3rd Imp.)
APPIAN'S ROMAN HISTORY. Horace White. 4 Vols.
ARISTOPHANES Benjamin Bickley Rogers. 3 Vols. [G. R. Mair.
CALLIMACHUS AND LYCOPHRON. A. W. Mair; and ARATUS, CLEMENT OF ALEXANDRIA. Rev. G. W. Butterworth.
DAPHNIS AND CHLOE. Thornley's Translation revised by J. M.
Edmonds; and PARTHENIUS. S. Gaselee. (2nd Imp.)
DEMOSTHENES, DE CORONA AND DE FALSA LEGATIONE,
C. A. Vince and J. H. Vince.
DIO CASSIUS: ROMAN HISTORY. E. Cary. 9 Vols. Vols. I to VIII.
DIogenes LAERTIUS. R. D. Hicks. 2 Vols.
EPICTETUS. W. A. Oldfather. 2 Vols. Vol. I.
EURIPIDES. A. S. Way. 4 Vols. (4th Imp.)
GALEN: ON THE NATURAL FACULTIES. A. J. Brock.
THE GREEK ANTHOLOGY. W. R. Paton. 5 Vols. (3rd Imp.)
THE GREEK BUCOLIC POETS (THEOCRITUS, BION, MOS-CHUS). J. M. Edmonds. (4th Imp.)
HERODOTUS. A. D. Godley. 4 Vols. [(2nd Imp.) HESIOD AND THE HOMERIC HYMNS. H. G. Evelyn White.
HIPPOCRATES. W. H. S. Jones. 4 Vols. Vols. I and II.
HOMER: ILIAD. A. T. Murray. 2 Vols.
HOMER: ODYSSEY. A. T. Murray. 2 Vols. (2nd Imp.)
JOSEPHUS: THE LIFE AND AGAINST APION. H. St. J. Thacke-
JULIAN. Wilmer Cave Wright. 3 Vols. [ray. 8 Vols. Vol. I.
LUCIAN. A. M. Harmon. 6 Vols. Vols. I to IV. (Vols. I & II 2nd Imp.)
LYRA GRAECA. J. M. Edmonds. 3 Vols. Vols. I and II.
MARCUS AURELIUS. C. R. Haines. (2nd Imp.) MENANDER. F. G. Allinson.
PAUSANIAS: DESCRIPTION OF GREECE. W. H. S. Jones. 5
Vols. and Companion Vol. Vols. I and II.
PHILOSTRATUS: THE LIFE OF APOLLONIUS OF TYANA.
F. C. Conybeare. 2 Vols. (2nd Imp.)
PHILOSTRATUS AND EUAPIUS, LIVES OF THE SOPHISTS.
PINDAR. Sir J. E. Sandys. (3rd Imp.) [Wilmer Cave Wright.
PLATO: CRATYLUS, PARMENIDES, GREATER HIPPIAS, LESSER HIPPIAS. H. N. Fowler.
PLATO: EUTHYPHRO, APOLOGY, CRITO, PHAEDO, PHAED-RUS. H. N. Fowler. (4th Imp.) [W. R. M. Lamb.
PLATO: LACHES, PROTAGORAS, MENO, EUTHYDEMUS.
PLATO: LAWS. R. G. Bury. 2 Vols.
PLATO: LYSIS, SYMPOSIUM, GORGIAS. W. R. M. Lamb.
PLATO: POLITICUS AND PHILEBUS. H. N. Fowler. ION.
W. R. M. Lamb.
PLATO: THEAETETUS AND SOPHIST. H. N. Fowler.
PLUTARCH: THE PARALLEL LIVES. B. Perrin. 11 Vols.
POLYEIUS. W. R. Paton. 6 Vols. Vols. I to IV.
PROCOPIUS: HISTORY OF THE WARS. H. B. Dewing. 7 Vols.
QUINTUS SMYRNAEUS. A. S. Way. [Vols. I to IV.
SOPHOCLES. F. Storr. 2 Vols. (4th Imp.)
ST. JOHN DAMASCENE: BARLAAM AND IOASAPH. Rev. G. R.
Woodward and Harold Mattingly.
STRABO: GEOGRAPHY. Horace L. Jones. 8 Vols. Vols. I to III.
THEOPHRASTUS: ENQUIRY INTO PLANTS. Sir Arthur Hort.
THUCYDIDES. C. F. Smith. 4 Vols. [Bart. 2 Vols.
XENOPHON: CYropaedia. Walter Miller. 2 Vols. Vol. I. (2nd Imp.)
XENOPHON: HELLENICA, ANABASIS, APOLOGY, AND SYM-POSIUM. C. L. Brownson and O. J. Todd. 3 Vols.
XENOPHON: MEMORABILIA AND OECONOMICUS. E. C.
Marchant
XENOPHON: SCRIPTA MINORA. E. C. Marchant.

IN PREPARATION

Greek Authors.

- ARISTOTLE, NICOMACHEAN ETHICS, H. Rackham.
ARISTOTLE, ORGANON, W. M. L. Hutchinson.
ARISTOTLE, PHYSICS, Rev. P. Wicksteed.
ARISTOTLE, POETICS, AND LONGINUS, W. Hamilton Fyfe.
ARISTOTLE, POLITICS AND ATHENIAN CONSTITUTION
Edward Capps.
ARISTOTLE, RHETORIC, J. Freese.
ATHENAEUS, C. B. Gulick.
DEMOSTHENES: OLYNTHIACS, PHILIPPICS, LEPTINES AND MINOR SPEECHES, J. H. Vince.
DEMOSTHENES, PRIVATE ORATIONS, G. M. Calhoun.
DIO CHRYSOSTOM, W. E. Waters.
EUSEBIUS, Kirsopp Lake.
GREEK IAMBIC AND ELEGIAC POETS, E. D. Perry.
ISAEUS, E. W. Forster.
SOCRATES, G. Norlin.
MANETHO, S. de Ricci.
PAPYRI, A. S. Hunt.
PHILOSTRATUS, IMAGINES, Arthur Fairbanks.
PLATO, MENEXENUS, ALCIBIADES I. and II., ERASTAI.
THEAGES, CHARMIDES, MINOS, EPINOMIS, W. R. M. Lamb.
PLATO, REPUBLIC, Paul Shorey.
PLUTARCH, MORALIA, F. C. Babbitt.
ST. BASIL, LETTERS, R. J. Deferrari.
SEXTUS EMPIRICUS, A. C. Pearson.
THEOPHRASTUS, CHARACTERS, J. M. Edmonds; HERODAS: HIEROCLES PHILOGELOS; CHOLIAMBIC FRAGMENTS
CEREIDES; NAUMACHIS; SOTADES, etc., A. D. Knox.

Latin Authors

- AULUS GELLIUS, J. C. Rolfe.
BEDE, ECCLESIASTICAL HISTORY, Rev. H. F. Stewart.
CICERO, AD FAMILIARES, W. Glyn Williams.
CICERO, IN CATILINAM, PRO MURENA, PRO SULLA, B. L. Ullman.
CICERO, DE NATURA DEORUM, H. Rackham.
CICERO, DE ORATORE, ORATOR, BRUTUS, Charles Stuttaford.
CICERO, DE REPUBLICA AND DE LEGIBUS, Clinton Keyes.
CICERO, PRO CAECINA, PRO LEGE MANILIA, PRO CLUENTIO, PRO RABIRIO, H. Grose Hodge.
CICERO: PRO SEXTIO, IN VATICANUM, PRO CAELIO, PRO
PROVINCIIS CONSULARIBUS, PRO BALBO, D. Morrah.
CICERO, TUSCUSAN DISPUTATIONS, J. King.
CICERO, IN VERREM, L. H. G. Greenwood.
HORACE, EPISTLES AND SATIRES, H. R. Fairclough.
LUCAN, J. D. Duff.
OVID, FASTI, Sir J. G. Frazer.
PLINY, NATURAL HISTORY, W. H. S. Jones and L. F. Newman.
ST. AUGUSTINE, MINOR WORKS, Rev. P. Wicksteed.
SENECA, MORAL ESSAYS, J. W. Basore.
SIDONIUS: LETTERS. E. V. Arnold.
STATIUS, I. H. Mozley.
TACITUS, ANNALS, John Jackson.
VALERIUS FLACCUS, A. F. Scholfield.

DESCRIPTIVE PROSPECTUS ON APPLICATION

London - - WILLIAM HEINEMANN
New York - - G. PUTNAM'S SONS

P1 Living, minus
6452 Living
12
1010
7.4

PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE CARDS OR SLIPS FROM THIS POCKET

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY

